CHASE ENDS IN BLAZE OF WET GOODS

Rum-Runners Beach and Burn Cargo Worth Many Thousands

ELUDED GUARDS FOR TWO YEARS

LAGUNA BEACH, Cal., Nov. 4 (AP).—Federal prohibition officers and Coast Guard authorities were still without a clue tonight to the identity of rum-runners who early today beached and set fire to their speedboat and its cargo of liquor when closely pursued by a Coast Guard cutter.

Estimated to have carried 3,000 cases of liquor, of which thirty-six were salvaged, and valued at approximately $100,000, believed to have been taken off a mother ship anchored off the coast near here, the rum boat was sighted by Chief Boatswain's Mate Paul Ortilp off the coast a few miles south of here.

RAIL OF BULLETS
The rum runners, unable to make speed with the heavy cargo, headed for the beach when the Coast Guard cut loose with a hail of machine-gun and rifle bullets.

Driving their craft onto the beach the crew leaped out and set fire to the cargo before escaping. Three members of the crew later visited a restaurant here and identified a person in Los Angeles they referred to as "big chief."

ALWAYS OUTDISTANCED
Ortilp said he had been trying to catch the speedboat for two years, but each time had been outdistanced by the speedy craft, which was powered with two big motors and carried a 2,500-gallon gasoline tank.

Coast Guard officials said they believed the boat was en route to Los Angeles with its cargo for the holiday trade.

U.S. WILL BUY IMPORTED GOLD

Government Increases Price for Metal When London Quotation Drops

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 (AP).—The Government apparently eased up on its foreign gold buying today but advanced the price of the metal when newly mined in the United States to another new high figure.

While dispatches from abroad told of inactivity on the bullion markets, the domestic price was increased from $32.57 to $32.67. This change was accompanied by a decrease in the London price of gold from $32.26 yesterday to $32.08 today.

London advices said only one purchase of gold was made there today, and it was a comparatively minor one, involving only $1,104.

PRIVATE PURCHASE
Officials made no comment on the reported imminence of private purchase of gold to be imported. They were not surprised, however, for the Reconstruction Corporation has offered to buy newly imported gold with no limitation placed upon the amount. However, it was not divulged what price it expects to pay for it.

In contracts with the private operators, the Government has been buying directly in the world market, through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. This institution, in turn, has been operating through the agencies of member banks with foreign branches.

FIVE BURNED WHEN OIL STILL EXPLODES

HOUSTON, Texas, Nov. 4 (AP).—Five men were burned, one fatally, and several others suffered minor injuries in an explosion of a still at the American Petroleum Company refinery, on the Houston ship channel, near Newworthy terminal, late today.

Harold Wells, twenty-four, of Houston, who was burned about the face and body, died several hours after the explosion.

SAILING FOR EUROPE
NEW YORK, Nov. 4 (CP).—Major-General A. D. McRae, of Vancouver, is sailing for Europe today on the Ile de France.

Snowstorm in Colorado Causes Fatal Accidents

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 4 (AP).—Two persons were killed today as the indirect result of a snowstorm which swept the Rocky Mountain region.

Fred Weidman, thirty-five, and Mrs. Sarah Jane Kealher, seventy-five, both of Denver, were killed in automobile accidents near here. Weidman was riding in a car which

Predict Volcanic Eruptions

GRIPPED with fear, inhabitants of the island of Hawaii have been fleeing from the island, following an announcement by Kilauea Observatory officials that an eruption is expected soon of Kilauea or Mauna Loa volcanoes, or both. Extensive lava flows are expected, similar to that in lower photograph, which wiped out villages near Mauna Loa in 1926. At top is a view of Kilauea during eruption.

Youth May Hinder "Next War" Though It Seems Inevitable

Noted Correspondent of World's Last Great Conflict Feels Sure Only of Few Years' Respite—Peace Depends on Younger Generation's Insistence on New Ideals of Friendship

(Anxiety over the possibility of a new war continues in Europe and the United States. Some observers in this country believe another war is inevitable. In the following article, Sir Philip Gibbs, who served as a correspondent with the British and Belgian forces throughout the World War, reviews the situation and points where hope for continued peace lies.)

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Europe—and the world—is still demon-haunted by the fear of war. For the past nine months, advancing in intensity, this fear has dominated the newspaper press and private conversation. When Germany broke off from the Disarmament Conference and abandoned the League of Nations a shudder passed through the soul of the world. Is it then coming again—a new conflict of nations in which another generation of youth will go down and the ruin of civilization will be made certain?

How can we get on with the ordinary job of life, look forward to economic recovery, establish any kind of peace in our own minds when there is this fear lurking behind the bluest sky that, in a little while—a few years at most—the reek of poison gas will be in our lungs, the roofs over our heads will be rent by high explosives, and our children's bodies will be mutilated? In millions of homes in European countries, those thoughts lurk in anxious minds.

IS THERE REAL FEAR?
Now, there are really behind all this fear, or is it a neurosis from which we are all suffering because of disordered nerves and exploited by sensation-loving journalists? Who is going to war? What nations are ready to fight? What could have put the French army on the move, and lit the fire which smoldered across many frontiers. For a week or two after the triumph of Hitlerism in Germany, there was the immediate risk that mobs of marching boys might have recrossed the Polish corridor or done other acts of passionate folly which could have put the French army on the move, and lit the fire which smoldered across many frontiers.

IDENTITY NOT CLEAR
Authorities first said the Moslem whose body was found near that of Miss Winters outside the wall of Jerusalem was probably Mohammed Karaman, a probationary civil employee, en route to resume his duties in Madras.

Later, information indicated they now believe he was Hader Abadi, not Karaman.

An unnamed letter, which Miss Winters was said to have written shortly before her death, led authorities to believe there was a romance between her and the man whose body was found near hers.

EXTRADITION PACT TO BE TERMINATED

UNABLE TO OBTAIN RETURN OF INSULL

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 (AP).—A sharp order to denounce the Greco-American Treaty as useless as proved by the twice-denied request for Samuel Insull went to Athens today from the United States.

The usual instructions were sent to Lincoln MacVeagh, minister at Athens, after Greek courts had refused to order the return of the former Chicago utilities magnate as sought on a Cook County, Ill., indictment, and later of a Federal bankruptcy charge.

WOULD BE FORMAL NOTICE
MacVeagh's denunciation of the Treaty of Greek Government, in accordance with these State Department directions, would constitute a formal notice the United States desires to terminate the covenant.

Once terminated, officials said, international machinery for any future attempt to obtain Insull would have been removed.

It was indicated, however, the treaty will likely remain in force for another year.

SAYS PACT USELESS
Denunciation of the treaty was decided on by the Government after a thorough consideration of all available steps. United States authorities on extradition contended Greece had not lived up to the treaty terms in denying application for Insull's return to answer charges here. They felt the pact had been proven "entirely useless" to the United States.

BALLOTS CAME BY PARACHUTE

Telegraph Creek Casts Votes Two Days Late—Result Not Affected

TELEGRAPH CREEK, B.C., Nov. 4 (CP).—Two days after the rest of the province had balloted, thirty-two voters of Telegraph Creek, northernmost constituency in British Columbia in the Atlin Riding, today marked their choice in the Provincial election on ballots parachuted down from a speeding plane.

With ice blocking navigation on the Stikine River, and engine trouble and inclement weather delaying flyers from Atlin, B.C., voters here were unable to cast their ballots until a plane from Carcross, Y.T., flew over the post just before dusk yesterday and dropped a parachute with the ballots.

ELECTION UNAFFECTED
The polling today did not affect the election of W. J. Asseeline, Liberal, who led his nearest opponent by 105 votes with votes from here and Dease Lake unaccounted for.

Asseeline received four votes, T. J. Shenton, C.C.F., five; T. W. Falconer, Ind., four; H. F. Kergin, Ind., fourteen, and H. W. M. Ralston, nine.

Ten Dease Lake voters will probably not vote as the plane was unable to reach that post.

Says New Works in U.S. Northwest Will Cost $500,000,000

Programme Involves 350 Different Projects, Including Dams, Waterworks and Buildings—Will Provide Much Employment

SEATTLE, Nov. 4 (AP).—Walter A. Averill, president of Washington Construction League, estimated today that the public works programme for the Pacific Northwest involves 350 different projects, costing more than $500,000,000. Contracts for many dams, waterworks, sewers, roads, bridges and buildings will be let this winter, he said, in an article in today's Pacific Builder and Engineer, "furnishing an unprecedented volume of winter employment."

Projects he listed for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana either have been approved for immediate construction, are ready for approval by state advisory boards, or are being prepared by responsible groups for submission to the boards.

Heading the schedule are the Grand Coulee, Bonneville and Fort Peck dams, totaling $153,000,000. The

Return of Fleet To Atlantic Is Welcomed News

TOKIO, Nov. 5 (AP).—Editorially welcoming the reported imminent concentration of the United States battle fleet in the Atlantic, the newspaper Asahi today said the news gave the Japanese nation a favorable impression.

The paper said the action would return to normalcy a feeling of tension which had existed between Japan and America since incidents in Manchuria and Shanghai, which were only questions of feeling and not reason.

COMMUNISTS DENOUNCED

Prussian Premier. Hurls Charges of Murder and Bestiality

BERLIN, Nov. 4 (AP).—A bitter denunciation of Communists as "murderers" and "bestiality" was made at the Reichstag arson trial today by Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Prussian Premier and National Minister without portfolio.

"Murder is Communism's first commandment," the minister asserted. "Sadism has its home in the Communist Party, and cruelties are nowhere so bestial as where the Communists are in a position to torture people."

This charge aroused the ire of Georg Dimitroff, one of the five alleged Communists accused of firing the Reichstag, February 27. Dimitroff asserted German police did nothing to trace possible perpetrators other than men they thought were accomplices of Marinus Van der Lubbe, who confessed setting the blaze.

"I order you not to put such insinuations," Goering shouted at the Bulgarian Dimitroff, "who are a scoundrel who ought long ago to have been at the gallows for firing the Reichstag."

IS CHEERED WILDLY
The courtroom was turned into a political meeting hall as, under oath, the minister delivered his philippic against Communism. He so worked on the feelings of the audience by his impassioned oratory that spectators and German reporters applauded and cheered him wildly.

During his two hours of testimony announced as an answer to the charges uttered abroad that the Nazis themselves had a hand in the incendiarism and planned it as a move to eliminate Communism at the time the Hitlerites were coming into power—Goering used every vituperative epithet in his expressive vocabulary.

Order for Gold Buying In Seattle

SEATTLE, Nov. 4 (AP).—An order was received today by a Seattle brokerage firm from Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to buy 40,000 ounces of foreign gold, Manager G. E. Ledner announced.

He said he was of the opinion that an effort would be made to buy Canadian gold, thereby saving the price of shipment to London and the 40,000 ounces will cost somewhere above $1,200,000.

It is to be "for the account of American corporations and individuals."

KILLED BY SPRING GUN
COLVILLE, Wash., Nov. 4 (AP).—Shot in the leg by a "spring gun," Lester Dargy, forty, a hunter, died at hospital here today. Dick Bone said he assumed the weapon had been set for deer.

CUBA NOW IN POLITICAL MAZE

More Radical Cast to Government Imminent—Quiet on Surface

HAVANA, Nov. 4 (AP).—Out of a maze of political conferences, public statements and private discussions, persons close to the Cuban situation tonight saw a definite movement toward the left.

A more radical cast to Cuba's Government appeared imminent, these sources said, following upon the action of the administration supporters early today in refusing President Ramon Grau San Martin's resignation tendered last night.

RESIGNATIONS OFFERED
Resignation of the Grau Cabinet also was offered yesterday as preface to an unexpected reorganization of the Government intended to bring into line with it the five opposition factions—the A.B.C., O.C.R.R., Nationalist, Marianistas, and Menocalistas. Facing the refusal of these factions to consider anything short of Grau's resignation, however, the "authentic revolutionaries" asserted their Government was consolidated.

The political situation was quiet on the surface, although opposition forces were preparing to continue their campaign to oust Grau in favor of a president who would commend the support of all revolutionary factions.

RAILWAYS WILL SPEND MILLIONS

LONDON, Nov. 4 (CP).—On top of announcement the London & Northeastern Railway is to spend £2,300,000 on improvements "as a consequence of the return of better conditions," the Great Western Railway today announced it will spend more than £2,000,000 next year on new rolling-stock and relaying lines.

Features of the Great Western programme will be ten new "Castle" engines enabling a big speeding-up, 200 new passenger vehicles in which comfort of passengers is being especially cared for, and new freight cars designed to travel as fast as passenger trains.

Several Relatively Large Building Contracts by Industrial Concerns for Additional Plants Seen as Encouraging Sign—Car Loadings and Retail Sales Show Substantial Gains

OTTAWA, Nov. 3 (CP).—Most conclusive evidence of industrial recovery in October was the greatly increased activity in the construction industry, it is reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The value of contracts placed during October was greater than in any month since November, 1931. An encouraging feature, it is stated, was the placing of several relatively large contracts by industrial concerns for additional plants.

Cannot Find New Basis for Agreement Is Now Admitted

WILL FIRST SOLVE NATIONAL PROBLEM

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 (AP).—President Roosevelt and Great Britain's representatives came to the end of the road today on the proposal for downward revision of the war debts owed this country.

At a final White House conference, it was conceded there was no basis for any new agreement on debts. Next week a statement will be given out explaining the differences that prevent a solution of this vexing problem.

The British, in asking for a downward cut, were unable to meet the terms of Mr. Roosevelt. So discussions were called off.

There was no official announcement after the party, but it was learned unofficially there was little or no prospect of further negotiations.

DECLINE TO TALK
Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British ambassador, and Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, the head of the British debt commission, declined to talk upon leaving the White House, as did the other participants, William Phillips, the Under-Secretary of the State, and Dean Acheson, the Under-Secretary of the Treasury.

The British Embassy said tonight that Sir Frederick was leaving the embassy next Wednesday. Officials declined to elaborate, but it was

FARMING PLANS ARE REJECTED

President Roosevelt Finds Programme Submitted by Governors Unacceptable

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 (AP).—President Roosevelt, today, flatly rejected price fixing and regulation of farm production and sales as the solution of the farm price emergency.

He turned down the programme submitted by five Mid-Western Governors in the face of their predictions that his decision would lead to rapid and widespread farm unrest and disorders, then urged them to get firmly behind his own adjustment programme.

"IN VARYING DEGREE"
The Governors—Olson of Minnesota, Herrington of Iowa, Berry of South Dakota, Schmedeman of Wisconsin, and Langer of North Dakota—expressed disappointment in varying degrees as they prepared to return home.

Langer said he was "disgusted," and asserted that the decision "means the farmer is the forgotten man of this Administration."

Olson, the nation's only Farmer-Labor Governor, asserted the Administration is "mistaken in believing it can solve the farm problem through voluntary action, as compulsion is necessary to get results."

CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS
Berry and Herrington said that they had confidence in the ultimate success of the Administration programme. Schmedeman said he believed the Administration eventually would be forced to shift its farm programme and incorporate some of the proposals of the Governors.

The President upheld Secretary Wallace and George N. Peek, the farm administrator, making it clear he believed the Governors' plan would be unworkable and unacceptable to most of the nation.

B.C. Stores To Be Closed November 11

VANCOUVER, Nov. 4 (CP).—Remembrance Day, November 11, is a statutory holiday, and British Columbia stores will be closed all day, it is announced by George R. Matthews, provincial secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.

Mr. Matthews points out that by special Act of Parliament, November 11 has been set aside as a holiday. Interpretation of the act is left in hands of Provincial Governments.

Announcement that Ottawa stores would close for two hours only caused considerable confusion, Mr. Matthews believes.

New York Preparing for Municipal Vote Tuesday

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Law enforcement agencies of the state and city are concentrated to insure honest balloting in the municipal elections on Tuesday. Police, deputy attorneys-general and thousands of watchers are organized to block "booters" and "repeaters" from storming the polls.

With grand juries in Manhattan and the Bronx working overtime investigating fraudulent registration, Police Commissioner James F. Bolan completed plans to send more than 18,000 policemen—the greatest force ever organized for a single day's work—to the voting places.

Tammany Hall, fighting one of its greatest battles in its career, went into the final stages of the battle with renewed vigor—encouraged by its surveys of the electorate's response to Mayor John F. O'Brien's last week of campaigning. Joseph V. McKee and Fiorello H. LaGuardia are opposing Mayor O'Brien.

SAYS MACHINE WORKED WELL

Dr. Clem Davies Gives Analysis of Election Results

"You will observe that the Liberal machine works well in the up-country districts, where the votes are more consolidated and more easily bought," declared Dr. Clem Davies, independent candidate in re-opening his election campaign in Victoria at a meeting in the Chamber of Commerce last night.

He gave an analysis of the election results. He pointed out that thirty Liberals had been returned by a total of 112,000 votes. The anti-Liberal votes amounted to 164,000. Only in eight ridings were the Liberals given a clear majority, he said.

ROAD WORK SAFE

The road work was safe for the farmers and others in the up-country for another five years, Dr. Davies declared.

"The Liberal victory is by no means a vindication of party rule. Let the Liberals remember that the vote is not a vote for them, but a vote of protest against the conditions prevailing and a command to change those conditions at the earliest possible moment," the speaker said.

"Do not, I beg you, throw any more power to the present Government. You know where you are now. The Government majority is already too big for the good of the people of the province."

NEED STRONG GROUP

"Elect now a strong group to watch that the Government, in its strength of numbers and invincible voting power, does not altogether forget the taxpayer and the laborer," Dr. Davies said.

"Pick men whom you think have a decent chance to win in Victoria and don't throw away your vote for sentiment's sake," he declared.

"Like yourself," someone shouted from the back of the hall. His reference to the Liberal Party and T. D. Pattullo were not received by a group at the rear of the auditorium, but Dr. Davies appeared for fair play, and the heckling stopped.

He concluded his address with "I'm against party government, but I'm in it. That Opposition will not be merely sitting in the seat of the scornful. You will find my vote with the Government in all things beneficial to you. I will vote for a tumble to yourselves, and in view of what the Province as a whole has done, realize your opportunity to elect a group to watch that the Government, in its strength of numbers and invincible voting power, does not altogether forget the taxpayer and the laborer," Dr. Davies said.

RESPECT NOT ENOUGH

A respect of several years. That is something, but not good enough to give one any sense of security. There is, indeed, no sense of security in the mind of Europe today, and if one looks only at the evidence, there is one conclusion possible. We are advancing steadily towards war.

Everything that happened before 1914 is being repeated now. Secret alliances for a new balance of power are being arranged behind the scenes. Espionage has resumed business, and spies are being arrested in frontier towns. The armament manufacturers are getting busy. War propaganda is at work again, with appeals to honor, fear, national prestige, security, patriotism. Naval estimates are being revised. Censorship of peace ideals is being tightened up, even in England. Speeches are suppressed on the radio if they are not in accordance with Foreign Office views.

In many countries, gas-mask drill is in the curriculum of schools, and the spirit of sacrifice for the state is being preached from platforms and pulpits. The old hate stuff is being revived. Inflammatory speeches are being reported. The Junker mind, strong outside as well as inside Germany, is expressing its ideas and ideals of blood and iron after some years of enforced silence. Among the tribes of men, the tom-tom is beating in the jungle, and the witch doctors are mounting their incantations, and the young braves are smearing themselves with war paint. It is not a pleasant outlook for humanity and civilization, if one looks only at these aspects of the world today.

In the East, as well as in the West, this inflamed nationalism is at work sharpening weapons for future conflict, and only playing for time before the struggle. Japan and Russia eye each other sullenly, and troops are on the move to strategic points. All hopes in the League of Nations, pledges against war, an advance towards international law, are fading because of this revival of faith in force.

Is there, then, no hope? Is another war, or another series of wars, inevitable after a few more years of preparation?

PRE-WAR MENTALITY

There are some facts which should be examined by those who believe in that "inevitability," and by those especially—the elder minds—who are thinking in terms of pre-war mentality, and believe that when they give their orders to march, their peoples will obey. I am not so sure of that. I believe that the younger mind in many countries has different ideas, different visions, different ideals of life. It is possible that when the young men and the major-general issue their recruiting papers, there will not be the same rally of youth as in the days of August, 1914. There may be civil war when international war is declared.

Certainly, in England, there is a strong pacifist movement led by youth itself, and cutting across all social strata. I know some of these young people of these young men who, even since the arrival of Hitlerism, endeavor to understand the minds of German Fascists and to thrust out in debate the problems and passions which may lead to war again.

When they had in their minds, and expressed crudely, was refusal to be stamped into war by old slogans such as the famous powder issued by Kitchener—"Your King and Country Need You"—when the action of old statesmen, obsessed by fears or believing war to be an admirable discipline for youth, would lead, most likely, to the utter ruin of the country and to the downfall of the King. They refuse to be found by secret treaties to which they have not consented, or to ancient pledges made by old gentlemen who, in their opinion, ought to be dead and buried.

THE WHITE FEATHER

In the last war, maiden ladies handed white feathers to young men not in uniform—some of whom had just come back from the front. There is now a society of young men who distribute white feathers in advance and wear them as a badge of courage. Because they are convinced that plots are afoot to jockey them by appeals to false sentiment into war against people with whom they have no quarrel and with whom they wish to link a comradeship of youth, determined to make a decent kind of world.

There is, of course, a lot of youthful bravado about these gestures of defiance. They are not to be taken too seriously; but what is very serious and quite important is the belief of large numbers of young men in England and elsewhere, in whatever cause, is a betrayal of civilized ideas, and that the intelligence of the modern mind is capable of abandoning that way of argument, if the old men will only die off before they have quite arranged the new world. They may be over-estimating the intelligence of their own generation!

LABOR'S PLEDGE

Labor groups in England and the Trade Union Group have pledged themselves utterly to resist any operation in a new European war. They will declare a general strike if it forces upon the nation by any treaty or alliance, calling upon the shambles in some quarrel between France or Germany with which they are not concerned, as they believe.

Labor leaders are in desperate earnestness about this, and it is perhaps the one passionate conviction which all will admit. Left wing parties in England, which otherwise are much divided by political differences and methods.

On the other hand, the Labor party in the House of Commons and many Labor men outside, including intellectual pacifists like Professor Leask and Sir Norman Angell, would not advocate a resort to arms as far as I understand them, in a preventive war, by which all peace-loving nations join up to restrain any other nation whatever from disturbing the peace of the world by mad-dog action. They are advocates of an international code of justice with an ideal of police force behind it—an ideal from which we are still distant.

SWORN ALLEGIANCE

In addition to pacifist and political groups in Great Britain, there is an immense body of public opinion which has sworn allegiance to the principles of the League of Nations. This is a horror of any combination of circumstances in which would drag young men to the same battlefields as their fathers or brothers—le buried in recent years. England is at the present time hostile to any war adventure.

Most people outside France imagine without evidence, that the French nation is almost eager to invade Germany if a good pretext arises for a "preventive war." That one can conclude that the French nation is being done by the leaders, and what is happening in the Foreign Office and their propaganda departments, there is one conclusion possible. We are advancing steadily towards war.

Everything that happened before 1914 is being repeated now. Secret alliances for a new balance of power are being arranged behind the scenes. Espionage has resumed business, and spies are being arrested in frontier towns. The armament manufacturers are getting busy. War propaganda is at work again, with appeals to honor, fear, national prestige, security, patriotism. Naval estimates are being revised. Censorship of peace ideals is being tightened up, even in England. Speeches are suppressed on the radio if they are not in accordance with Foreign Office views.

In many countries, gas-mask drill is in the curriculum of schools, and the spirit of sacrifice for the state is being preached from platforms and pulpits. The old hate stuff is being revived. Inflammatory speeches are being reported. The Junker mind, strong outside as well as inside Germany, is expressing its ideas and ideals of blood and iron after some years of enforced silence. Among the tribes of men, the tom-tom is beating in the jungle, and the witch doctors are mounting their incantations, and the young braves are smearing themselves with war paint. It is not a pleasant outlook for humanity and civilization, if one looks only at these aspects of the world today.

In the East, as well as in the West, this inflamed nationalism is at work sharpening weapons for future conflict, and only playing for time before the struggle. Japan and Russia eye each other sullenly, and troops are on the move to strategic points. All hopes in the League of Nations, pledges against war, an advance towards international law, are fading because of this revival of faith in force.

Is there, then, no hope? Is another war, or another series of wars, inevitable after a few more years of preparation?

PRE-WAR MENTALITY

There are some facts which should be examined by those who believe in that "inevitability," and by those especially—the elder minds—who are thinking in terms of pre-war mentality, and believe that when they give their orders to march, their peoples will obey. I am not so sure of that. I believe that the younger mind in many countries has different ideas, different visions, different ideals of life. It is possible that when the young men and the major-general issue their recruiting papers, there will not be the same rally of youth as in the days of August, 1914. There may be civil war when international war is declared.

Certainly, in England, there is a strong pacifist movement led by looking forward to a comradeship of youth across the frontiers. There are groups of these young men who, even since the arrival of Hitlerism, endeavor to understand the minds of German Fascists and to thrust out in debate the problems and passions which may lead to war again.

ADVOCATE OF FRIENDSHIP

There is now a remarkable paper called "Notre Temps," which publishes the reports of these meetings between young France and young Germany and advocates friendship, or at least intelligent intercourse, between them.

Before the end of the Great War only fifteen years ago—there were multitudes in French divisions because of the endless slaughter commanded by generals whose plans of attack were ruthless. Millions of men who had been told that they were fighting a war to end war came home mutilated in their bodies but resolute to carry out that pledge of allegiance to different ideals of life. Many of these men are still alive. They still tell the things they saw and suffered.

Is French youth lusting for a new war? The idea is preposterous. Except in defence of French civilization—their own wives and children—French youth will not march as one man. When the bugles call, there will be absentees. An unnecessary war, concocted by politicians, would be resisted by civil strife—though all men will fight for their own homes and hearths if it comes to that.

MOOD OF EXALTATION

And now in Germany, what of this marching, singing, shouting youth? Are they out for war? Do they want it? Are they eager to invade France again? I think that if they were called upon to do so by their leaders in their present mood they would do so, even if they knew that death was theirs. They are in that mood of exaltation. They are ready for sacrifice. They would march, singing, into furnace fires. They are intoxicated with patriotism, racialism, Hitlerism.

But it is false, I think, to suggest that their minds are bent upon war with France. As a matter of fact, they are not. They are much of France and foreign countries. Their minds are turned inward upon the German Reich and this astounding revolution, this renascence of the German soul, as they believe it to be, which has for the first time in history given them a racial and national unity.

FORGETTING FACTS

We forget many people do not know—that until Hitler came Germany was divided into states which had their own rights. We forget that until the war, it was divided by kings, dukes and principalities. We forget that until Hitler preached and won, Germany had five private armies preparing for civil war on the grand scale.

The German people, desperate by long suffering, outwitted by the rest of Europe, suffering a deep sense of humiliation and convinced that they were the victims of gross injustice by the peace treaties, were seething with political strife and hatred.

Then, by some magic of the spell-binder, Hitler, under his strange device the younger, more ardent, and most vital crowd. He gave them new hope. He killed their old enemies. He promised them a new heaven and new earth. Now by his triumph Germany has for the first time in history a sense of unity, a kind of mystical joy in its brotherhood of race. There is something noble in this as well as something dangerous. The brutalities are known. The nobility is not admitted by foreign critics.

LIVING ON EMOTION

These German Fascists are living on emotion. They are not guided by reason. They even despise the intellect. They are in a state of self-intoxication. But they are ready for generous emotion if any nation will hold out the hand of friendship towards them. Their leaders have made offers of friendship to France. They were made within a few hours of leaving the League and refusing the terms of the Versailles treaty.

France replies with accusations of hypocrisy. I am inclined to think they may be sincere. Hitler, in power, is not the same man as Hitler, the builder's laborer and the author of "Mein Kampf." Mussolini, in power, is not the same man as when he was hailed out to prison by Italian police.

These German leaders, sincere or insincere, know that Germany is isolated and surrounded by heavily armed nations. They are not going to declare war. They don't want war, for a long time anyhow. They have many internal problems to keep them busy. They will find no credits from any bankers in the world for the purpose of a severe war. They are already on the edge of financial catastrophe.

EAGER FOR FRIENDSHIP

But the rank and file are eager for friendship with the same emotions they are ready for death in any battlefield. Germany wants to be loved, and is surprised and hurt that nobody will give it a civil reply. Even now a generous approach by France, an offer to bury the hatchet, a proclamation of comradeship for the building of a new world by youth, would have an enormous and spiritual effect in Germany. It would disarm the bully spirit. It would, I honestly believe, lead to the real peace of Europe.

If only France would do this! If only they would take the risk of it! Or is that expecting too much of human nature and of Frenchmen? We have respite for a severe war ... there is still time to make peace. There is still time for a younger generation to turn its back upon the jungle and the deaf ear to the incantations of the old witch doctors. That "next war" may never happen in Europe, though I am less hopeful of the East.

Chancellor Dollfus of Austria Makes Speech Despite Blasting of City's Light Connections

KLAGENFURT, Austria, Nov. 4 (AP).—Stubborn Chancellor Engelbert Dollfus refused tonight to let bomb explosions interfere with a speech he gave a patriotic front mass meeting.

Klagenfurt was plunged into pitch darkness by a blast, which destroyed the city's lighting connections, and Dollfus quelled an incipient panic by continuing his address calmly.

Under the weird light of flickering candles the little statesman went on, pounding home the points of his appeal until the final paragraph was delivered, even though there was another bomb explosion just outside the meeting hall.

THIRTEEN MAY SEEK ELECTION

Non-Partisans Drop Out of Contest for Two Vancouver Centre Seats

VANCOUVER, Nov. 4 (CP).—A battle royal between a baker's dozen of candidates for the two Legislative seats in Vancouver Centre is expected, following nomination day Monday.

That Vancouver did not finish with elections on Thursday was made evident by the determination of parties to continue the struggle for these two down-town Legislative seats.

The only definite withdrawals are the Independent Non-Partisan group. Death of one of their candidates, W. J. Bowser, caused postponement of the election.

PROBABLE LIST

Liberals: Gordon McG. Sloan and Gordon S. Warner.
C.C.F.: W. W. Lefaux and J. S. Taylor.

Independent C.C.F.: Colonel H. E. Lyon and Gerald V. Pelton.

Socialists: Sidney Earp and (possibly) E. J. Young.

United Front: Fred Grange and C. J. McKendrick.

Unionist-Labor: William S. McKenzie.

Following nominations it is expected that all parties will begin an intensive campaign. Most of them have retained headquarters established before postponement.

B.C. Representatives at Gathering

THE unique headgear of the British Columbia delegates who attended the recent biennial convention of the Anglican Young People's Association in Toronto, gave them an air of distinction, and was a source of considerable comment on the part of citizens of Toronto. In the above picture, taken outside St. Paul's Anglican Church, Toronto, are the four British Columbia delegates wearing their headgear, as follows (left to right), Frank Bain, Vancouver; Stanley C. Hawkins, Victoria; J. H. Aylwin, Victoria, and Halford Wilson, Vancouver.

Toronto A.Y.P.A. Parley Marks Definite Progress

Stanley C. Hawkins and J. H. Aylwin, of Victoria, Return From Attending Dominion Conference—Matters of Policy Considered

The biennial conference of the Anglican Young People's Association, which concluded its sessions in Toronto recently, marked another very definite step in the progress which this Dominion-wide organization of the youth of the Anglican Church is making.

That was the opinion expressed yesterday by Stanley C. Hawkins, past president of the British Columbia Provincial A.Y.P.A. Council, and J. H. Aylwin, vice-president of the same body, both of Victoria, who were two of the British Columbia delegates who attended the parley.

The conference this year concerned itself with formulating a policy which will meet the growing demand for better organization in the Middle West and Quebec and the maritime provinces, as well as laying a groundwork for a more efficient organization in the provinces of British Columbia and Ontario, where the A.Y.P.A. is now firmly established.

At this conference, delegates from Victoria, Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Brandon, Winnipeg, Toronto and several Ontario points, Montreal, St. John, Halifax, met to discuss their various problems, and come to definite conclusions regarding the steps to take in the furtherance of the work. The matter of paid field secretaries was thoroughly discussed, and a definite decision reached that the A.Y.P.A. should continue to carry out its extension programme through the medium of voluntary effort on the part of leaders throughout the country.

The matter of more efficient organization in parts of the Dominion not coming within the jurisdiction of provincial councils, had a large share in the discussions, and the decision to organize along diocesan lines was made.

Such matters as the continuation of the official organ of the A.Y.P.A. on a monthly basis, and the issuance of a handbook for members, the revision of "programme suggestions" for branches, and a review of the manual were all taken up and steps taken to improve such publications and literature.

DOMINION OFFICERS

The election resulted in Harold Soward, of Toronto, being chosen dominion president; Miss Doris Wheadon, of Toronto, dominion secretary, and Thomas Edmondson, of St. Catharines, dominion treasurer. Vice-presidents were also elected for the various regions of Canada: British Columbia, James Walker; Rupertland, J. Ford; Ontario, E. Belsham; Canada (Quebec and the maritimes), W. Rycroft. Regional secretaries: British Columbia, Halford Wilson, Vancouver; Rupertland, Mrs. J. Ford; Ontario, Miss E. Holmes; Canada, W. Keeble. In addition to the officers, many corresponding members were appointed, among whom were J. H. Aylwin, of Victoria, and Frank Bain, of Vancouver.

In order that the dominion executive may have the benefit of advice from outstanding leaders who, during the past few years, have done so much to make the A.Y.P.A. what it is, an advisory board was created. S. C. Hawkins, of Victoria, former dominion vice-president, being appointed, together with Harry Nurnish, past president of the Ontario Towne, past dominion president, as the personnel of this board.

PLEADS FOR COURAGE

The annual conference of the Ontario A.Y.P.A. was being held at the same time as the Dominion conference, the main events were shared by the two bodies, the first of which was the conference service at St. Paul's Church, on October 19, when some 2,000 members of the A.Y.P.A. heard Rev. Canon Shatford, of Montreal, preach a very inspirational sermon, his topic being "Courage and Co-operation for Christ and His Church."

In his sermon, Canon Shatford stated that courage of the highest order was essential in every member of the church, especially the younger section. If the church was to maintain its rightful position in the world as now passing, when the right kind of Christian living on the part of the church member was vitally necessary. A reception to the visiting delegates followed, when Rt. Rev. D. T. Owen, bishop of Toronto; Rt. Rev. R. J. Renison, rector of St. Paul's Church, and Mayor Stewart, of Toronto, welcomed the visitors, at the same time expressing their appreciation of the work being carried on by this dominion-wide organization of youth. On the following morning some 850 young people attended Holy Communion in St. Paul's.

The duel conference was brought to a fitting close when 1,000 members of the A.Y.P.A. attended the conference banquet. The guest

Liberal Leader Poses for News Reel Cameraman

PREMIER-ELECT T. D. Pattullo faced the news reel camera yesterday with his two grandchildren, in front of his home on Beach Drive. The screen interview was arranged through the Victoria Chamber of Commerce and the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau, with the Associated Screen News. Mr. Pattullo talked for a few moments into the microphone, while the camera ground. Mr. Pattullo spoke of British Columbia's natural resources, touched on Liberal victories here and in Nova Scotia previously, and expressed the hope the remainder of the Dominion would be similarly minded in the near future.

speaker was Rev. Canon Cody, president of the University of Toronto. Canon Cody emphasized the challenge made to the youth of the Dominion at this time when the Christian religion was being so severely criticized, and the need for every young man and woman to live their lives in accordance with the motto of the A.Y.P.A., "For Christ and the Church."

Mr. Hawkins and Mr. Aylwin spoke highly of the manner in which citizens of Toronto extended such warm hospitality to all delegates, while they were in the Ontario capital.

On behalf of the staff, Postmaster G. H. Gardiner, on Friday, presented Miss Gribble with a traveling case as a token of the regret which all felt over the severance of long and pleasant associations.

REARMAMENT OF GERMANY

It is conceivable that a concert of the Great Powers could prevent Germany from rearming but there is no indication whatever of such a likelihood. The League of Nations has, tentatively at all events, lost whatever authority it might possess over one of the participating Powers by virtue of Germany's resignation from the League. It was never the purpose of that organization to coerce a Power outside its scope of authority, and while Germany's defection does not officially take effect for two years' time that country is, to all intents and purposes, no longer a participant in the League's councils. Thus, the League's hands are tied. Germany now enters the category of the United States and Russia, and, as with these countries, the League will adopt a policy of non-interference.

The growth of Nazism has cast a pall of fear over Europe. It is held to forecast another great war. The fear, however, should not be an imminent one, and before war might develop on a great scale much may happen. Germany is now completely isolated. Morally and politically her course is condemned by other nations, particularly because of her treatment of her Jewish nationals. Any war of aggression on her part in the immediate future would raise up a host of enemies. France regards Nazism with suspicion; so does Britain. The United States would remain aloof from European entanglements, but there is no war on a great scale in these modern times into which any and every nation might not be drawn. Italy, too, will most certainly not encourage any military adventure on the part of Herr Hitler. Her fear would be that Austria and Hungary would become catspaws of Reich policy.

These considerations, coupled with the time that must elapse before Germany could be prepared for another war, gives Europe a breathing space. In the meantime there is much discussion as to what can be done to prevent Germany from rearming. Probably consideration of this problem will end in talk, unless there is a determination to enforce the Treaty of Versailles. For the moment the terms of this pact seem to have been allowed to go by the board. Infraction will probably follow infraction until the pact becomes a dead letter.

MATERIALISM

In the hearts of a number of people of the present day the thought persists that the State is the god of things material; they worship the possibility of permanent blessings flowing from political action. There is, it would seem, an emotional impulse in that direction. It is a conception which tends to make for materialistic thought alone, and there is no doubt that too much attention devoted to such a frame of mind exercises a blighting influence. The characteristics of the belief appear to be spread by the gospel disseminated by propagandists; there is a restriction of opinions which such a doctrine inculcates; there is the attempt to stampede the people to a desire for the Totalitarian State. In the pursuit of that ideal, reason, and even personal affections, are becoming eclipsed.

Materialism, as displayed in political, economic and social senses, can mean the setting up of the "God State" as something to be worshipped instead of the God Immortal. That phase of belief is evident in Nazism, in Fascism, in Communism, in Socialism, in Syndicalism, in all political creeds which make for the Totalitarian State. Public opinion in some directions is becoming little better than a store of spare parts. The God-given machinery of the mind is falling to exercise its spiritual functions. It is concentrating too much on materialism alone. In the process minds become warped, because there is a lack of the exercise of those functions of the soul that have the deepest meaning.

It is a mistake to believe that mental development is inevitable in the individual as the years advance. There can be mental deterioration as well, and unless care is exercised in the outlook it will assuredly take place. Such degeneration is due to listlessness, or unbelief, when man is confronted with the things of the spirit and the duties of religion. That degeneration is apparent, too, when man is immersed in the things of the material world to the exclusion of the things of the unseen. That absorption leads to moral atrophy; it portends the loss of faith and hope in anything beyond human ken. The source of this deterioration is in the secret recesses of a man's soul. It may bespeak failure to follow an ideal because of love of money; it may mean that degeneration which destroys spiritual desire; it may be a blank refusal to seek the path of light. Deterioration of character extinguishes the glow of spiritual aspiration and destroys belief in such a glow in others. The reality of moral distinctions becomes unreal.

Men are differently endowed in their moral powers, and that difference seems to be accentuated by the influences of environment and propaganda. That is one reason why materialism, which is now the subject of such intensive publicity by the proponents of the Totalitarian State, can gain away. What is being preached so unrelentingly in this particular is one of the influences which is deadening powers of spiritual perception. The main struggle, the only struggle that matters in the long run, forces on in the world today is that between the forces of materialism and those of spirituality. One is the world's religion, which fails to respond to the claims of the spiritual life; the other is the religion which leads to the City of God. The belief in the "God State" as setting up ideal government on earth leads to compromise in regard to truth. The belief in God's Kingdom regards truth as an essential concomitant of the Christian life. The world's religion is lenient towards personal vices. Not so the religion of Christ, for vice of any kind cannot have a place in the scheme of spirituality. The religion of the world—materialism—can never rise above its own level. It has no treasure where neither moth nor rust can corrupt. There is no worship in the creed, unless it be of the mammon of unrighteousness. There is no permanent peace. Those who espouse that religion must know that sooner or later the things upon which they have set their hearts must be lost. Those who have no religion but the materialism of the world are bankrupt at the last. There is no joy that is prolonged in their hearts; there is no perennial cheerfulness; there are no abiding satisfactions; there is no light shining beyond the horizon as a guide; the faith in Eternity is missing in their lives. In their vision of the future there is a pall of darkness. They regard the world as their treasure house from which everything for their material welfare is to be extracted. Moral action can play little part in their lives for they are concerned mainly with things of a mundane character.

It is the religious man who makes the best of both this world and that which is to come. It is he who finds the noblest expression of his worth on earth. It is axiomatic that a religion which gives no hope for the future is not one which man can live truly in the present. The worth of human life can only be measured aright as it comes into contact with that which is Divine. It is those who have faith in this belief who regard the world, not as a universal provider, but as an enemy to be overcome or a servant to be disciplined to obedience. To such Christians every event in life is but the stepping stone to the Life Immortal, to an existence that gives interests higher than any that can be offered by man-made laws. That is the life that brushes aside or withstands dauntlessly the despair of illusions, the fuzziness of distractions and the frenzies of fear. It is those who live such a life who see moral purpose everywhere, who meet each emergency with confidence, who are ever treading new steps to moral duty. For such the zest of life is far greater than for those who base their hopes and aspirations on mere materialism. Life has present attainments and infinite possibilities for the Christian. He realizes that he is made after the power of an endless life.

AMERICA'S GOLD POLICY

The American policy of entering world markets for the purchase of gold is designed for gold control of the currency in the United States. It is a step towards the time when America, in common with other nations, will return to the gold standard. For the time being it must mean the devaluation of the dollar and that, too, is a part of the American financial policy in the hope that the relative prices of commodities will rise.

The method adopted is to enter the world market as a bidder for gold against all-comers. To this end the United States is offering a premium on the world price of gold, a price which has been fixed in London. For purchase purposes American dollars are being sold for sterling funds and French francs and gold is to be bought with the proceeds. When a domestic supply of gold is bought in the United States it is paid for with Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures. These, however, would not be acceptable in other countries for gold purchases.

The success of the latest American financial scheme does not rest entirely in the hands of the Americans themselves. It is a question of how far foreign interests will permit the American dollar to depreciate. It is also a question of how far London will continue to sell gold, no matter at what premium. There is some connection between the new American policy and the discussion which has been going on relative to war debts but what it is is not clear. In the meantime gold holders can make a handsome profit by selling to the American Government.

MORALITY

Everywhere the tendency has been to separate religion from morality, to set them in opposition even. But a religion without morality is superstition and a curse; and anything like an adequate and complete morality without religion is impossible. The only salvation for man is in the union of the two as Christianity unites them.—Mark Hopkins.

My God,
What might I not have made of Thy fair world
Had I but loved Thy highest creatures here?
Had I but loved Thee, Thou havest loved the Highest.
It surely was my profit—had I known:
It would have been my pleasure—had I seen.
—Tennyson.

A cheerful temper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful, and wit good-natured.—Addison.

Gold is, in its last analysis, the sweat of the poor and the blood of the brave.—Joseph Napoleon.

Note and Comment

By R. B. D.

All would be deem'd, even from the cradle, to rule in politics as well as wit. The state, the war, the people and the church. (God bless us!) statesmen all at once. —Churchill.

Tides of public opinion, like tides of the sea, ebb and flow. Public opinion runs strongly in one direction for a time, and then turns around and runs as strongly in the opposite direction. Occasionally it gallops like the race at the rocks where the waters sweep in a restless flood towards the Pacific Ocean. It is no new thing in the record of British constitutional institutions for a political party to be almost annihilated in a general election.

Not so very long ago the Labor Party of Great Britain was swept out of power by an overwhelming flood of aroused public opinion. Not so very long ago either in a general election in British Columbia only one Liberal member was elected to the Legislature. The late Mr. Brewster was that member. He became the leader of a Liberal Party of one, afterwards the leader of a party which waxed in strength until it attained power and Mr. Brewster became the Premier of the province. There are many interesting lessons to be learned from political history. One of the lessons is that there is latent strength in small as well as in odd numbers. Another lesson is that there is latent weakness in numbers which are so strong as to be almost overwhelming.

When a seemingly strong party is practically extinguished for a time, all its sins of commission and omission go down into oblivion with it. If there is a saving element left, the party must set to work and establish itself upon a new and strong foundation. It seems to be the fate of every political party that a time must come for what critics and reformers call a house cleaning. Competent political leaders, however, set their establishments in order in time to prevent the necessity of house cleaning.

In Great Britain the tide seems slightly against the strongest political party ever attained to the House of Commons. By-elections and municipal elections indicate that public opinion is not so strong behind the administration as it was for the first two years after the general election. We do not attach a great deal of importance to the manifestations of public opinion indicated in by-elections or municipal elections. One of the peculiarities of the vagaries of public opinion in Britain is that by-elections usually result unfavorably to any government which may be in power, while there is no direct connection between municipal and national affairs. Then governments with great parliamentary majorities become unaccountable and lethargic, paying little attention to the pulse of public opinion. Their very strength is a source of weakness. In these times of depression and unrest, when public opinion may be stamped by emotional appeals of irresponsible agitators with a gift of the gab, alert political leaders should cultivate intimate relations with the people and strengthen their defences. There is an old saying that a stitch in time saves nine. A stream may be effectively dammed at its source; it cannot be arrested when it reaches full flood.

But the most convincing lesson to be learned from the result of the provincial elections is that political parties cannot be abolished by either the declarations of a democratic leader or the decrees of a private dictator. Public opinion in this British country is not so volatile or whimsical as it is in the nations of Central Europe and in some of the nations of the American continent. In British Columbia there may crop up occasionally theoretical disciples of Lenin, or even of a Hitler; but when popular institutions are threatened any revolutionary movement is speedily arrested by aroused public opinion. The merits of party government have been demonstrated by experience and established upon practice and precedent. As a result of the election we shall have one strong party in power, and a multitude of wild parties have been swept away like chaff before the wind. The probability is that we shall never have to endure the sight of such a babel of tongues expressing such a confusion of ideas and advocating such impossible measures.

We shall at least continue to have responsible government by a party which can be held responsible for its acts. We are not sure that the position of the defeated government leader is not more to be coveted than the position of the leader who should speedily be established in his place. Mr. Pattullo is said to be a bold and a courageous man. He will have to be more than both in order to guide the province out of a situation which is not so much the fault of the defeated government as of governments which preceded it. It is one thing to make lavish promises before an election.

THE COLONIST IN LONDON

The Colonist may be procured at the International News Stand of Messrs. Selfridge & Co, Oxford Street.

It is quite another thing to redeem those promises after an election.

However, there is no doubt that the election has accomplished one good thing. It has cleared the fields of a lot of political rubbish. Out of the extraordinary disorder of an election without parallel we may have ordered government.

Old-Time Memories

By R. T. WILLIAMS

To build a fort against what might be hostile tribes and establish a complete village surrounding the same, and huge warehouses and dwellings inside the stockade, was no small job. Such was the initial start in 1833, shortly after the arrival of Sir James Douglas and party at Clover Point. Those intrepid pioneers had much to be thankful for—a mild and equable climate, ample building material, food in abundance, especially fish, venison, wild fruits and vegetables, and native races that were easy to deal with, and in the majority of cases, of a helpful and kindly nature, with a willingness on their part to conform to law and order, and truth and honesty were the watchwords. The Hudson's Bay Company was also fortunate in selecting the wonderful site which is now occupied by Victoria.

Had not the Company displayed the greatest amount of good judgment by appointing men of ability to take hold of the work that in most cases required experience, especially in dealing with the natives, serious trouble might have ensued. One principle laid down in the beginning was truth and honesty (as mentioned before) in all their dealings with the natives, and later on the white settlers who came from all parts of the world enjoyed the same advantages. Strict keeping of all agreements was at all times carried out. This had a most powerful influence, especially with the native tribes, so much so that after their confidence was won no power could shake the good will and the Indians had in the Hudson's Bay Company. The feeling of security and fair treatment experienced by the natives as well as the whites during the nineteen years before the removal of the fort, and afterwards, was one pleasant round of contentment, with ample food for all, work for everyone. Any person who came to the Colony expecting to secure servants at low wages, of course, met with disappointment. After 1855 the Chinese continued to arrive in greater numbers. A large proportion of them adapted themselves readily to the ways of the Colony. They were exceedingly law-abiding and most industrious, securing employment in all lines of labor, both in the homes and gardens of the whites and in various other occupations. A number entered into business in a large way. They had a monopoly of the laundry business for many years. Prior to the date mentioned and some years after the land of the settlers furnished the vegetables, the chief supply was grown at the Work Farm. The Field Apartments are now standing on a part of that large vegetable garden that comprised many acres. It was a most valuable asset in the production of garden truck of all kinds, the Chinese taking up vegetable growing later. The fertile flats of the Cowichan Valley furnished our chief supply of garden truck, grown by the natives, which they peddled from house to house. To hear them calling in the early morning, "Wap-pat" (Chinese for potatoes) as they moved from one home to another was very pleasing. They carried them in wooden buckets (no balanced iron buckets in those days) and set a price of twelve cents a bucket. They had a miniature combine amongst themselves. If one offered twenty cents for a bushel of potatoes, the others tried to beat them down he would be met with the remark, "Mika cultus wah wah," meaning "You are wasting your wealth," or, as the boys say in these more modern days, "You are talking through your hat." Twenty-five cents was the price, and you could take them or leave them. It was noticeable that their clothing was rather scant, consisting of possibly a blanket wrapped around the body, or, if the weather was mild, a pair of trousers. Of course, that was a very healthful and economical way of dressing, and picturesque to a degree, which, of course, had more to do with the selling than with the growing of the potatoes. The potatoes were excellent in every respect. Frequently there were two peddlers, one selling fish and the other potatoes. They were genuine. A large round salmon and a bucket of potatoes for fifty cents delivered at your door is rather more than you can expect to secure for so small an amount of money in these days.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT PLAN

Sir—No needy child in Victoria will be without a toy this Christmas if the plans of the "Scouts Toy Shop" carry through. They have entered the "Buckingham" Christmas gift plan whereby they will receive free toys and candies in exchange for Buckingham wrappers, either cigarettes, fine cut or pipe tobacco. The number of toys depends simply on the number of empty packages they collect by December 8.

Ballot boxes, in which smokers may place their empty Buckingham packages, have been placed in restaurants, barber shops, billiard rooms, tobacco stores, club rooms, drug and grocery stores, wherever tobacco is used or sold. Posters accompanying the boxes invite the public to "Leave your Buckingham wrappers here for the needy children's Christmas gift scheme." Every empty Buckingham package they secure will help them to take care of a large number of children on Christmas Day.

North Pole explorers have not yet returned with reports of Santa Claus smoking to while away the days in the Arctic wastes, but there is a growing belief that he does, and that this year he is smoking Buckingham. He needs the co-operation of every smoker in

Ease Pain, Headache in Few Minutes

For Quick Relief Say ASPIRIN—When You Buy

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered. Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which an Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking. The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. An Aspirin Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly, you swallow it. And this is ready to go to work almost instantly. When you buy, though, be on guard against substitutes. To be sure you get ASPIRIN'S quick relief, be sure the name Bayer in the form of a cross is on every tablet of Aspirin.

WHY ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop an Aspirin Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate. What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

Women Designated For Solemnizing Marriage in B. C.

Forty-One Ways of Getting Married in This Province—Nearly 1,100 Persons Qualified to Perform Ceremony, One of Them a Postman in Far North

By Rev. Dr. J. K. UNSWORTH

FIVE persons must be present at every marriage ceremony that takes place in this Province in order to make it duly legal. These are the official representatives of the law, who must be either a duly accredited member of a religious body or a civil marriage commissioner; the contracting couple, and two witnesses. Of a certainty, one of these five must be a woman, since there is no wedding without a bride.

But it comes as a surprise to find that at around the time that in British Columbia, at any rate, four of the five may be females, and that there can be a valid ceremony at which only one man only is present, and he the bridegroom. To put it another way, the two witnesses and the officiating religious representative may be of the same sex as the bride. In brief, there are women who are duly authorized to perform the marriage ceremony. And they lie the knot so tightly as the highest prelate in the land.

The fact is that there are forty-one different religious bodies, churches, denominations, sects, faiths, cults and what have you, whose spiritual leaders may play a part of knot-tinders in this important social function. There are forty-one different ways of getting married. Since some of these forty-one give to woman the place of teacher and preacher, to her the Government assigns the legal prerogative as the presiding officer of the marriage group of five. Among these are members of the Four-square Gospel Lighthouse and Unity Centre. There is no dearth of church officials. There are nearly a thousand of them, and their number is increasing, due probably to the large quota of retired ministers who find this congenial climate in their later years. In 1930 there were 839, in 1931 there were 890, while in July of this year 951 were issued licenses to preach and to perform marriages. Vouchered for by their respective church authorities.

It is a large range of officialdom that is listed on the marriage registrar's book—archbishop, bishop, vicar-general, clergyman, minister, priest, curate, rabbi, leader, elder, pastor, associate pastor, evangelist, brigadier-general, chaplain, three of the Salvation Army, or whatever be the duly-appointed official of the respective group, congregation, group, body, society or denomination.

UNITED CHURCH LEADS Not without interest are the names of the religious bodies and the number of married couples for which they became responsible. It gives a cross-section of the religious life of the Province. United Church of Canada is in the lead with 206 weddings, followed by the Church of England with 201, and the Roman Catholic Church with 119. The six that show two figures are: Baptists, 81; Presbyterian Church in Canada, 57; Lutheran, 28; Pentecostal Assemblies, 20; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, 13, and Salvation Army, 12. Fifteen more have to their credit between eight and two marriages, as follows: Seventh-Day Adventists, eight; Free Methodist Church of North America, five; Church of Nazarene, four; Plymouth Brethren, four; Reformed Episcopal, four; Catholic Apostolic, three; Four-square Gospel Lighthouse, three; Holiness Movement, three; Buddhist Mission of North America, two; Christadelphians, two; Jewish, two; Mennonite Brethren, two; New Presbyterian Church, two; Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, two; Society of Friends, two.

Each of the following fourteen religious bodies or societies started one couple on the matrimonial pathway: Apostolic Church of the Pentecost, Christian Missionary Alliance, Christian Reformed Church, Finlandia, Methodist Episcopal Church, Christian Church, Vancouver, Greek Orthodox Church, Liberal Catholic Church, Methodist Episcopal Church, African, Metropolitan, Tabernacle, New Thought Temple, Inc., Pacific Coast Missionary Society, Unitarian, Unitarian Church, Victoria City Temple, in addition to the three following religious groups are represented in 1931: Moravian Church, two; Swedish Evangelical Mission Covenant, one; International Apostolic Congress, one.

Some of these bodies are not represented in the city of Victoria, but taken as a whole, they call attention to the diversity of faith found in this Province. The presence of the Oriental is indicated in the fact that two couples were married by Buddhist priests and according to the rites of this ancient faith. In all probability these were Japanese, as the Indian are mainly adherents of Sikhism.

PARSON NOT NECESSARY Religion is not, however, a necessity in the eyes of the law for a duly accredited marriage. Clergyman, minister, pastor, priest or rabbi may be dispensed with, if so desired by the contracting parties. Besides, there are out-of-the-way districts in the far-flung reaches of this Province where neither minister nor missionary is available. Marriage commissioners to the number of 114 in 1930 were deputized for this work. For the most part this interesting duty falls upon members of the Provincial police, gold commissioners and Government agents.

There is an intriguing item that the investigator comes upon in the dry tables of statistics and forms that are an inevitable feature of vital statistics. He discovers, among these 114 marriage commissioners scattered about the country is a postman; indeed, there may be two. But there is a postman at Port St. John, in Northern British Columbia, who is properly appointed to become a liaison officer for Dan Cupid, and after the due formalities to give the blessing couple his benediction.

Civil marriages, be it said, are not popular. In 1931 there were but forty-nine such, or one out of seventy-five of the total. In the same year, 329 marriages took place following the publication of banns, one out of every eleven. The interesting question of marriage fees must be left over to a later article. As a parting word, it may be said that they are less than they were some sixty or seventy

NOT ELIGIBLE AS CANDIDATES

Court Rules Persons on Relief Cannot Seek Election in Calgary

CALGARY, Nov. 4 (CP).—Alberta Appeal Court today ruled relief recipients could not enter as candidates at the civic elections.

Mr. Justice A. A. MacGillivray dissenting. City of Calgary applied to the court for a ruling on the question, which became a prominent topic in the election campaign.

The court found the relief recipients had "a moral claim if not a legal claim" against the city, and therefore could not enter as candidates at the civic elections.

Mr. Justice MacGillivray, however, held "men or women who, through no fault of their own, have suffered the pangs of hunger and the pain of cold, are able to speak with authority born of personal experience," and, therefore, should be heard in the civic government.

Chief Justice Horace Harvey and Justices A. H. Clarke, C. R. Mitchell and H. W. Lunney ruled against the workers, declaring the city charter said "any person having any unsettled or disputed account with or claim against the city" could not enter the election fray. The jobs of receiving aid from the city are making claims against the city "if not a legal one, certainly a moral one," the court ruled.

Kill that COLD!

Don't Merely Coddle It with Half-Way Measures!

A cold is nothing to triffl with! It may end seriously. A cold, being an internal infection, calls for an internal treatment. It also calls for a COLD remedy and not something good for a number of other things as well.
Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is what a cold requires. It is directly internal—and it opens the bowels, combats the cold germs and fever in the system, relieves the headache and ringing feeling and tones and fortifies the entire system. Anything less than that is taking chances with a cold. Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is sold by all druggists, 30¢ and 50¢. Accept no substitutes.

WATER FROLIC IS HELD BY Y.M.C.A.

For more than two hours last night, fifty members of the Y.M.C.A. swimming club sported themselves in the Crystal Garden swimming pool.
It was a frolic night, with swimming and freck diving the main features. Chris McFar, men's swimming club captain, was master of ceremonies, and led the aggregation under and over obstructions, around the pool and into it. Followed the leader as inaugurated by McFar, proved a tremendous hit, with chain and ankle diving, under water swimming, "ducking," plain and fancy diving.

GOVERNMENT GAVE ITS AID GENEROUSLY

COMPLETING PLANS FOR CONTINUANCE

OTTAWA, Nov. 4.—While relief is specifically a matter of provincial and municipal responsibility, yet in the great economic crisis of the past three years, the Federal Government, without constituting obligation, has come to the assistance of the provinces and municipalities so generously as to, in some degree, impair the Federal financial structure.
The Government realized it was no time to take refuge behind the constitution, and thereby differed from its predecessors. That there has been little suffering in Canada is due almost entirely to the assumption by the Federal Government of the moral obligation to see the people through the depression. The problem was beyond the powers of the provinces and municipalities.

TOTAL EXPENDITURES
Since the Government took office, in August, 1930, until August 30, 1933, the Federal Government has under relief legislation and through the wheat bonus spent $144,461,489. This great expenditure was made for direct relief, public works, Saskatchewan crop failure relief, the wheat bonus, and loans to Western provinces. The expenditures per fiscal year were:
1930-31 $18,173,554.67
1931-32 42,687,776.66
1932-33 24,307,390.12
1933-34 4,380,857.32
Total $89,529,578.77
Wheat bonus $12,719,900.12
Loans to Western provinces $2,212,009.64
Inces and interest — 42,212,009.64
Total $144,461,489.14

PAYMENTS AND LOANS

In payments and loans to provinces under the relief acts of 1930-31-32-33, there was spent of this amount $119,206,324.85. It was expended in direct relief, public works, single homeless advances, relief settlement and loans by provinces, as follows:
Prince Edward Island $266,802.82
Nova Scotia 2,294,740.47
New Brunswick 1,533,706.64
Quebec 12,614,052.20
Ontario 23,331,748.58
Manitoba 15,301,094.03
Saskatchewan 26,251,485.18
Saskatchewan Relief Commission 9,985,765.04
Alberta 14,652,465.18
British Columbia 14,652,465.18
Total $119,206,324.85

During this three-year period in relief there was advanced by loans to the four Western provinces $39,764,780.23. This was by provinces as follows:
Manitoba $7,908,771.61
Saskatchewan 20,002,129.57
Alberta 6,482,000.00
British Columbia 5,371,888.56
Total $39,764,780.23

INTEREST ON SECURITIES

Included in these loans was approximately $11,500,000 for payments on interest and maturing securities of these provinces. In addition to these large expenditures by contributions and loans, the Federal Government has made advances many large accounts, such as steel rail contracts, the wheat pool's bank liabilities, advances to Newfoundland with the provinces, Bank deposits, and like transactions. It cannot be said the Federal Government has not dealt generously with the provinces. Plans are being completed to continue assistance for another year. Highway construction agreements have been made with the provinces and next session it is believed the estimated sum for highway and other public works, as well as a Federal building programme.

Ask That Relief Scale Be Raised

NANAIMO, Nov. 4.—By invitation George S. Pearson, member for Alberni-Nanaimo electorate, was present at a meeting of the Nanaimo Married Men's Unemployed Association, held in the Legion Hall today, when a resolution was passed urging the Government to raise relief to cover the cost of necessities of life.

Despite the fact that Mr. Pearson suggested that it might be well to ask that emergency measures be used to provide food and clothing for acute distress cases, the meeting of the association, which was held at 2:30 p.m., was adjourned for everyone affected.

DEATH REMOVES A. F. GRIFFITHS

Well-Known Chartered Accountant Succumbs to Heart Attack

Funeral services for Albert F. Griffiths, aged seventy-one, who passed away at his family residence, 2833 Dufferin Street, Friday afternoon, will take place Tuesday. The funeral will leave Haywards' B.C. Funeral Chapel at 2:15 p.m. and proceed to Christ Church Cathedral, where services will be held at 2:30 o'clock. Rev. C. D. Schofield, Bishop of the Cathedral, will officiate. Interment will be in Ross Bay Cemetery.

Death of Mr. Griffiths followed a heart attack, and was quite unexpected. News of his passing came as a shock to a wide circle of friends.

Mr. Griffiths was born in Newport, Monmouthshire, Wales, on October 18, 1862. He was a resident of British Columbia for forty-six years, spending a number of years in Vancouver before taking up his residence in Victoria in 1908.

He was associated with several firms of chartered accountants before entering practice on his own behalf, with offices in the Belmont Building.

During a visit to England in 1902, Mr. Griffiths was made a freeman of the Worshipful Order of Needleworkers, London, an honor conferred upon him in recognition of services rendered to this ancient London guild.

He was prominently identified with the Masonic order, having joined Victoria Columbia Lodge No. 1 in 1906. He was also a charter member and past worshipful master of St. Andrew's Lodge No. 46, a thirty-second degree member of the Scottish rite, and a member of the Red Cross of St. Constantine.

Mr. Griffiths is survived by his widow, who is a prominent member of the Provincial L.O.D.E. and charter sister, Miss Emma Griffiths, residing in France.

In accordance with His Majesty's wish the coming festivities will be quieter than usual because of "the period of suffering the nation is going through."

This city was quiet, but guerrilla skirmishes went on in the most inaccessible part of the country.

Heron, who with her small son, Peter, will leave this week for her home at Jasper. Large pink and yellow chrysanthemums were used in the rooms and the tea table was most attractive with a lovely lace cloth and centered with a crystal bowl of mauve and yellow chrysanthemums, lighted by pink tapers in crystal sconces. About thirty guests were present to wish Mrs. Heron adieu.

Surprise Party
A most enjoyable surprise party was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. Percy Watson, 422 Stannard Avenue, last night in honor of their son, Robert Watson. Prize Winners
At the bridge party held on Friday evening by members of the local committee of the National Council of Education this month, this is Dr. Alfred Zimmermann, professor of International Relations, Oxford University, who, accompanied by his gifted wife, will spend Tuesday, November 14, in the city. Although their stay in Victoria is to be short, quite a number of engagements are being booked up for them, the principal one being the public meeting in the evening, at the Empress Hotel, at which Professor Zimmermann will give his lecture on "The Economic Problem."

This is the new of a series of six lectures on "The Foreign Policy of Great Britain" which Professor Zimmermann has been giving during his present tour across the country under the auspices of the N.C.E. In it he will deal with hindrances to recovery, contrasting the present conditions with the period after the 1815; the strategic lessons of the war; the struggle between economic internationalism and self-sufficiency; post-war economic "nationalism" contrasted with pre-war protectionism; the unemployment problem and its influence on foreign and inter-imperial policy; the crisis of 1921; the new trade treaties, and the relation between economic policy and peace.

VICTORIA FIELD STILL IN DOUBT

Nominations Close at 1 P.M.
Monday—Withdrawals
Up to Nov. 25

While there was much speculation as to candidates who will finally be nominated to run in the re-ported poll in Victoria on November 27, no official statements were made yesterday by any of the major groups in the test. Colonel Lorne Ross, Independent, backed up his verbal announcement of withdrawal by written notice to F. A. Willis, returning officer here.

Mr. Willis also issued a certificate to the Liberal agent, certifying that previous nominations by that party stood valid for the reconvened poll. Talk of resignation under some states was active, but nothing of a definite nature could be ascertained at a late hour.

NO GREAT INFLUX
The decisive nature of the election to date is operating to prevent a general influx on Victoria and Vancouver Centre by candidates defeated elsewhere, such as might have occurred if the main issue of government was at stake. The composition of the official opposition is, perhaps, one of the questions remaining to be settled.

Mr. Willis, in reply to questions, said that nominations in Victoria City will close at 1 p.m. on Monday.

day. Withdrawals, however, will be received in writing up to November 25, or one clear day before voting begins.

Hon. J. W. Jones, Minister of Finance, who was defeated in a close race in South Okanagan by the Liberal candidate, J. Allen Harris, returned to his home here yesterday, but declined to add to his post-election congratulations to the victor.

THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Sir,—Illness is the reason for my tardy reply but as a regular subscriber to The Colonist permit me to take up a little of your time and space to comment upon your leading editorial in your issue of Friday the 27th, wherein, according to my interpretation, you have dubbed the executive of the B.C. Conservative Association as being entirely responsible for the collapse of the Conservative party in provincial politics.

To me it is most amazing that you are not a little better informed in such matters—or is it that as a party organ you are adequately informed and that you wish to make the British Columbia executive the goat and so cover up the blunders of some of our then leading Conservative politicians, who would impress upon us, the British Columbia executive, the idea that the people of this province demand that this election be fought along non-party or Unionist lines.

As a member of the British Columbia executive let me tell you that we thoroughly emphasized the fact that we were Conservatives by deciding to refrain from participating in this election; and for very good reasons, inasmuch as Premier Tolmie and certain members of the Cabinet turned Unionist while others preached to us, very definitely, their non-party leanings.

In all your political wisdom, Mr. Editor, what would you have done under similar circumstances? Presumably you would have tried to gather together out of the wreck, sufficient adherents to form a much weakened Conservative party and thus inject into the present chaotic jumble another constant body for provincial honors. How often have we tried to persuade the Premier and certain executive members—who unfortunately were always in the majority—to call a convention so that the air could be cleared, misunderstandings ironed out and some measure of cohesion secured within the party to enable us to go before the people of British Columbia as a body of Conservatives. Such a desirable procedure was denied us and as good Conservatives we emphatically refrained from being anything but Conservatives.

Please, Mr. Editor, be honest with yourself and the Conservatives of British Columbia and place the blame where it belongs. I, for one, positively refuse to be a goat just to please your editorial whim.

W. C. HAMILTON.

TRADE EXECUTIVE ON WAY TO POST

B. C. Butler, Commissioner to Netherlands East Indies, Passes Through City

B. C. Butler, Canadian trade commissioner for the Netherlands East Indies, passed through Victoria yesterday, en route to take over duties at his new post, with headquarters at Batavia.

During the brief time that Mr. and Mrs. Butler were in Victoria, they drove around the city and outlying districts with T. J. Goodlake, secretary of the Vancouver Island branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Butler spent four years in Batavia as assistant commissioner to G. R. Heasman, who was recently transferred to Cairo. Mr. Butler was on his way to take over the commission for Holland, but, upon reaching Ottawa, was turned back to take charge of the Netherlands East Indies.

A witty member of Parliament, in the course of a debate on one occasion, sorely annoyed a member of the opposite party, and the latter jumped to his feet and exclaimed angrily: "The honorable member for B—, as everyone knows, has rooms to let in his upper story! The other member replied, quietly, and with a smile: "True, I have rooms to let, but there is a difference between the honorable member opposite and myself. Mine are furnished!"

TODAY'S RECIPE

RIAR'S Chicken—Here is a famous old Scots recipe: Sir Walter Scott refers to it in one of his works. Put 2 lb. of knuckle of veal into a saucepan of water with enough water to cover it well, boil slowly two hours and drain. Cut a young fowl into neat joints, skin it, and add to the veal liquor—which should be boiling—with pepper and salt to taste and a little mace. Boil for half an hour, then add a good tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Continue boiling very gently until the chicken is quite tender. Remove the joints, and keep hot. Put the saucepan back from the fire a little, and when just off the boil stir in three well-beaten eggs, stirring them quickly and in one direction without letting them curdle. Serve the broth immediately, handing outcakes with it. The chicken is served separately with mashed potatoes and spring cabbage.

Women Who Pioneered

MRS. R. B. McMICKING

British Columbia, Victoria, Mrs. R. B. McMicking! The words are synonymous.

No one in the province has more faithfully upheld the motto of the I.O.D.E. Chapter, of which she was regent for twenty-one years, than Mrs. McMicking. She has "kept one hand on the traditions of the past" to the extent that her "fad" for collecting material relative to the happenings and progress of British Columbia has resulted in a unique library of clippings, pictures and other data. Mrs. McMicking goes through life aware of everything that happens, and while of late years deafness has been a slight handicap to her, she confesses that it is often "convenient to be deaf."

No pioneer gathering, no public celebration of a national character, activity of the Daughters of the Empire, is complete without her. She always shows a delightful spontaneity, ready wit and keen sense of humor, together with sound judgment, sense of values and charity. It is this vital interest in living that has enabled Mrs. McMicking to reach her eighty-fourth milestone and still feel young. Her energy might well be the envy of women many years her junior, whose interest in the half-hearted.

CAME FROM SCOTLAND
Mrs. McMicking's earliest recollections do not go back quite as far as her birthplace, Garmouth, Morayshire, for she left Scotland with her parents and young brother when she was about two years old in one of the Pacific Mail Steamship boats. After nine months of hardship and stormy weather, during which three shipwrecks were endured, the boat reached Benicia, California, north of San Francisco. All the family treasures, save a small miniature of her mother, Mrs. Leighton, were lost on the voyage, and a copy of this on a brooch is always worn by Mrs. McMicking.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Leighton and her young family came to British Columbia, where her brothers, the Bules, were connected with the Hudson's Bay Company at Lytton.

"We stayed at the old St. Nicholas Hotel on Government Street when we landed in Victoria," Mrs. McMicking recalls, and speaks in glowing terms of its comfort, luxury and excellent cuisine. For a time the family lived in a brick house on Rae Street, now known as Broughton Street, and it was pointed out as "the house with the water tank," for in those days, when water was bought by the pailful at the door, the idea of a rain-water tank and a sink was utterly unheard of.

MARRIED AT LYTTON
At the Angela Ladies' College on Burdett Avenue, and later as a boarder at St. Ann's Academy, Mrs. McMicking received her education. Some of her happiest holidays were spent at the old Cornhill home, "Ashcroft Manor," from which the town derives its name, and she laughs as she recalls the wonderful laughing parties which were held there and the general gaiety which marked "the good old days." No speeding automobiles on the Cariboo highway, no comfortable railway afforded means of transportation to travelers at that time. "Barnard's Express from Yale to Lytton, with a night spent at Boston Bar on the way, was how we got there," Mrs. McMicking says. It was during the course of a visit to her brother at Lytton that she first met Robert Burns McMicking, who was in charge of the telegraph company's office at Yale. They were married at Lytton on June 28, 1889, and her trousseau was imported from England by Turner Beeton Company of Victoria.

Among Mrs. McMicking's relics is "The Bride," written by Charles Jeffries and set to music by J. Nelson, which was sung at her wedding reception by Rev. J. B. Good, the officiating clergyman.

CAME TO VICTORIA
"I wish I had kept my wedding dress," Mrs. McMicking says, "it would be another antique now. It was of white satin, covered with what we used to call illusion, and I like to be where the wheels are going round, and besides, it was too difficult getting in and out of town in the old car, so we moved back to Victoria."

FIRST TELEPHONE
Mrs. McMicking remembers the first telephone used in Victor, which was tested in her home on North Park Street. "All the officials and my husband were there, and others were down at the Government Street office. They'd say a few words into the mouthpiece, then clap it to their ears—the one served both purposes—and we all marveled that the voice could be heard."

Mrs. McMicking's interests have been quite varied. She is a charter member of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire in Victoria, and was vice-president of the Victoria Literary Society for twenty-four years; a member of the Local Council of Women since its inauguration; of the Friendly Help Society since its beginning; of the Burns Club, the King's Daughters, the Alexandra Club, the Dickens Fellowship, the Authors' Club and the Navy League.

HAPPY DAYS
Drama and music have always interested her, though, she says, "I hate to let the Sister at the Convent hear how I've neglected my music."

Oh, yes, those were the days, all right; no talk of depression, everyone had plenty, life was simple, but we were happy. Balls at Government House; parties, picnics, regattas and the theatre—it was all fun." And her eyes sparkle as she looks back so many years. "Why! Nobody thought five dollars too much for a seat at the theatre, and we saw really good plays and entertainments."

Arnold Bennett's description of "Aunt Clara" might well be written of Mrs. McMicking, "her desires and her achievement was to be bright, to take everything cheerfully, to look obstinately on the best side of things; and to instill this religion into others."

Brilliant Ball Planned for December 26

No social function of the younger set is more anticipated than the Beaux-Arts ball, which has been arranged to take place on Tuesday, December 26. The event will be held in the crystal ballroom of the Empress Hotel, which will be in fete for the occasion.

Bal Maque is the glamorous sounding motif of the evening and it promises to present an animated picture of brilliant costume, colorful lights, a background of striking decorative effects. As the Beaux-Arts dance will be outstanding as well as novel, advance inquiries indicate that it is interesting the older set as well as the younger set. A seven-piece orchestra has been engaged and supper will be served in the hotel dining-room.

Only guests in costume and masks will be admitted to the dancing floor, and with the wide scope of imagination made possible in costume ideas, a scene of shifting splendor will dazzle the onlooker.

That this will be a repetition of the varied interests and excitement with which the name "Beaux-Arts" is associated the world over, is certain, and anyone succeeding in making a last moment reservation will be accomplishing a noteworthy coup d'etat.

ASSOCIATION IS FORGING AHEAD

Rapid Growth Recorded by Amputation Association Since Its Inauguration

The Amputation Association of the Great War, commonly known as "Fragments From France," under whose auspices the big Armistice Ball will be held Friday night, is an organization that is Dominion wide. Established in 1921, the aim of the organization is primarily to care for the interests of those who have suffered blindness or amputation of any limb through service overseas in the Great War. Today it has headquarters in Toronto and branches in every Canadian city from St. John to Victoria. With a total membership of 4,300 it numbers over two-thirds of the war cases in Canada that comes under the classification of the association. ## Certificates Presented to Young Pupils

Piano and vocal pupils of Mrs. C. Page Melior gave a well-prepared recital at the New Thought Hall on Thursday evening when the high standard of the studio was upheld in significant fashion.

The occasion was made particularly pleasant by the presentation of certificates of the Royal Schools, London, England, by Mrs. Hebdon Gillespie, who in a charming talk to the students stressed the sentiment of loyalty to music, their greatest friend, and to the studio. Mrs. Gillespie commented on the singu-

Canada won by Geraldine Page Melior. This gifted performer was outstanding in Handel's "Chaconne," for which she was enthusiastically encored.

Dorcas Muir, a promising young player, and Mildred Graham, both showed much musical feeling in their harp honor brought to Victoria by the solo medal for highest marks in performances. Debussy's "Arlesienne" was well interpreted by Violet Melior, who gave Darguin's sprightly "Le Coucou" as an encore. Also commendable were Jean Routley, Jean Waddell, Jean Straight, Doris Hall, Vera Marsh, Marie Lock, Edith Cameron, Kathleen and Florence Greenwood.

Several interesting groups of songs were given by Rhoda Walton, Violet Melior, Rebecca Mortimer, Vera Marsh, Jean Routley and Geraldine Melior. A most effective and pleasing number was Weber's "Softly and Tenderly" sung as a part song by these young vocalists.

A feature of the programme was the guest artist, Mr. Smyth Humphreys, violinist, who by his fine musicianship, precision and earnestness won for himself the acclaim of the large audience. Splendid rhythm and tone were revealed in "Bazaria" (Corbett, Moffat), and "Pierrot in Forme de Habenera" (Ravel). In the Corbelle Sonata the accompanist, Miss Macquinn Daniels, was most effective. She presented with a handsome corsage bouquet.

Mrs. Gillespie was presented with a beautiful bouquet of carnations, and Doris Hall, on behalf of the students, presented Mrs. Melior with a lovely sheaf of chrysanthemums.

Langford

An enjoyable Halloween party for the children of the district was held in the Langford Women's Institute Hall. About eighty children and a number of parents were present. Special prizes were awarded to Mary Hamill and Glenys Smedley for nurses' costumes. Boys over ten years—Best Halloween costume, R. Bayles; best fancy costume, H. Henn. Little girls—Best Halloween, Cecil Temple. Best fancy, Lola Yates. Little boys—Best Halloween, Theodore Bayles; best fancy, Glen Moir.

Metochosin

Mrs. A. D. Ellwood, who has for the past few months been on a tour in Eastern and Western Canada and also parts of the United States, including the Chicago fair, has returned to her home, "Twogreen."

A man caused some amusement in a Manchester pawn shop by producing tickets and receipts for a watch and chain pawned in 1900. He had paid interest each year, and this totaled £28 10s. Taking the watch and chain out of pawn, he promptly sold them to the firm for the gold price, and made a profit of £3 10s on the transaction.

GREAT WAR SOUVENIRS ARE SHOWN

Display of War Relics Recalls Hectic War Days of 1914 to 1918

Ranging from a piece of German barbed wire to a Canadian soldier's "housewife," the display of war relics placed on view by the Amputations Association at 608 Fort Street, has been attracting a tremendous amount of attention for the past two weeks. So many war relics have been offered for this unique exhibition that it would be impossible to describe each one, but many of them are so outstanding as to warrant some description.

Among these is a German luger revolver with an attachment which converts it into a rifle, which was loaned by Charles Henley; a German rifle with saw-toothed bayonet, captured at Dixmude by T. Wilson, and an original Christmas card issued by Their Majesties the King and Queen to the troops in France in 1914.

Another interesting exhibit is the front page of The Daily Colonist of November 11, 1918, of an "extra" with the word "Peace" across the top of the page in six-inch high letters. The original "Operations Special Priority" issued the orders that finished the war owned by Louis Michelin is also shown.

A metal cross made from nose caps is an excellent example of workmanship that was done at the front in the troops' spare time. An enlarged photo of Mr. Fred Welsh, M.M. and Bar, of 627 Hillside Avenue, depicts him in the act of carrying a wounded Belgian lady to hospital. It was taken at Bully-Grenay in July, 1917. What happened to a Hun helmet when captured by British soldiers is shown in an exhibit loaned by Mr. G. Dodd, of the 10th Canadians. A Bosche bomber's armor plate weighing thirteen and one-half pounds, owned by Lt.-Col. de Salla, gives an idea of the protection they got from a bayonet. A panorama of the ruin of La Bassée is loaned by Mr. G. Wilson. Wire-cutters that fit on the end of the rifle and used in several attacks by Mr. Harry R. McDonald, of 3539 Oak Street, and a belt made in hospital by Mr. R. C. Pembroke is a good example of what "Tommy" could do to while away the time. Col. R. Ross Napier's mess kit hit by a flying piece of shrapnel tells its own story.

Princess Mary's gift box with original tobacco inside is another souvenir prized by its owner, Mr. Porteous. A complete German gun, gas masks, German paper bandages, soldier's rag lighter, nose caps, bombs and many different papers issued by units at the front are only a few of the many varied relics on display and anyone making a special trip to them comes away well repaid for their visit.

Keating

Mrs. K. Robertson and Miss Hazel Lamont were joint hostesses at a Halloween bridge party held at the Preside Inn, East Saanich Road. # LOVELY DRESSES!

Our artist sketched these from living models, but even so, one has to see them to really appreciate their fascination!

From among the many we have on hand for your selection a dress for every occasion has been portrayed -- afternoon dresses that spell youthfulness and poise... devastating, "dramatic" evening dresses, nonchalant Sunday-night dresses with just the "right" touch of coquetry... smart, jaunty sportswear... in fact, if a dress is contemplated from any angle we do wish you would come in and see them for yourself.

The most-used shades for afternoon are black, blue, brown, green, wine and eel. For evening the captivating pastel shades are in vogue, and don't we all admire those lovely rusty autumnal shades being worn for sportswear this season? Our "Better Dress Section" is noted for its unfailing ability to please and fit all types -- and if there ever was a season when fashions were adaptable, or Feminine whims whimsical -- it is now!

Her father accidentally met his daughter's young man in the street. "I say, young fellow," he said, "you have been calling on my daughter for well nigh a month. What are your intentions?" The suitor gulped nervously. "Well, sir," he replied, regaining his confidence, "I hope to become an addition to your family." Father was well prepared. "Oh, no!" he said, with a vigorous shake of his head. "You'll have to subtract, not add, young man."

HEAD OF PASTEUR INSTITUTE DEAD

Dr. Pierre Roux Dies at Octogenarian Age After Forty Years of Tuberculosis

PARIS, Nov. 4 (AP).—Dr. Pierre Paul Emile Roux died at the age of eighty yesterday after a long and outstanding career as director of the Pasteur Institute and collaborator with Louis Pasteur in studies of bacteriology and diseases like diphtheria.

He had suffered from tuberculosis for forty years while a colleague, Dr. Albert Calmette, who died October 29, struggled to find a cure for the disease.

From 1904 to 1918 he directed the Pasteur Institute. He studied infectious diseases and hydrophobia, and produced vaccines in collaboration with Pasteur and others for anthrax, diphtheria, tetanus, and rabies.

"Life is nothing but disappointment," groaned Brindley. "Cheer up," urged his friend. "Didn't you get 10 for putting your picture in the paper as being cured of all ills by Penderon's pills?"

"Yes, I did. An' now all my relatives are asking me why I don't go to work now that I'm cured."

Don't Neglect Pain in Back

What Today Means

"SCORPIO"

If November 5 is the date of your birth, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 10:30 a.m., from 3 to 4 p.m., and from 7:15 to 8 p.m. The danger periods are from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., from 5:40 to 6:25 p.m., and from 9:20 to 10:10 p.m.

More than likely you will feel like having a quiet and peaceful day, free from the intrusions of other people. As a matter of fact, you will probably have a great many callers and visitors on this date. People will be inclined to be "nosey" and will delight in prying into the affairs of others; sweethearts and newly-married couples will have little or no time to themselves.

The child born on this November 5 will probably like to "kick up a fuss" just for the fun of seeing others get disturbed. He will be an aggravating little one to have around. If this child has brothers and sisters that are older, he will make himself a nuisance to them. Will early have an eye for business and will pick up many an odd penny doing odd jobs around the neighborhood.

If November 5 is the date of your birth, the chances are that you are a pretty sane and sound person; it is not easy to put anything over on you in any way. You are a worldly person, not because you naturally get on to things quickly, but because you have probably had to get your head above water, you feel that everybody else should be able to do the same. You have no sympathy at all with those who are underhanded in any way.

Born on November 5, it is possible that there is a very sensitive side to your make-up, a side which is seldom shown to others, but which enables you to appreciate the more beautiful things of life. You are inclined to be poetic, and if you would only "let yourself go" you could undoubtedly do something in the way of artistic expression. You are inclined to be emotional and demonstrative, but most probably this side of you is well under control and is seldom shown. You will miss much of life because of your unwillingness to let others see this really finer side of yourself, lest you be looked on as soft and sentimental. This applies very largely to the men.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6
"SCORPIO"

If November 6 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8 to 9 a.m., from 5 to 6:30 p.m., and from 9:45 to 10:20 p.m. The danger periods are from 10 to 12 noon, and from 3 to 4:15 p.m.

You will probably feel in a productive frame of mind on this date and anxious to get a lot of work done. You will succeed in this if you are able to isolate yourself, for interruptions will prove most upsetting, and this, whether the work interfered with be physical or mental. Exercise will most likely not give you that usual feeling of exhilaration.

The child born on this November 6 will probably live easily; there will be nothing physically wrong with it; will do thoroughly and accurately what it has to do, but will not cover a great deal of ground. Absolutely reliable except for a tendency to be tardy for engagements. A fast and enthusiastic reader of mysteries.

If November 6 is the date of your birth, you are more than likely a sweet but ineffective person. You will miss a lot of real chances in life because of a certain "wishy-washiness" about you. If you would only take yourself in hand and make yourself snap out of it and do things, you would go a lot further ahead. You are not a fast worker, nor a particularly accurate one. You are not neat with other people's things in the office, and more than likely your own possessions are kept in a slovenly manner. You miss being a very fine person because of one of two little things that you allow to stand in your way. People like you and try to help you in every manner possible, and you are most appreciative of what they do; at the same time you don't quite seem to know how to go about helping yourself.

Born on November 6, you will probably have a great many jobs in the course of your existence; none of them will perhaps be really good ones.

Vancouver Scores Three Touchdowns and Place Kick in Handing Victoria Worst Setback of Season—Stewart and Downey Play Well for Visitors—Varsity, Royals Draw Showing marked superiority in every department of the game, Vancouver Athletic Club's Big Four gridders smothered Victoria under a 21-0 count in a league fixture played yesterday afternoon at Royal Athletic Park. About 1,500 spectators, many of whom were children witnessing the game, which was played on a fast grid and under excellent weather conditions.

The Boys' Band in its smart uniforms attended before and during the intervals, while at half time, Rebel Mowat and his Gray Line entertainers, assisted by several Chinese, gave a burlesque exhibition against the All-Blacks. The entertainment was good, the fans getting a great kick-out of the various antics of the "Rugger."

Vacs were too good for the local team. They played a heads-up brand of Rugby from start to finish and looked like a championship squad. Their passing, kicking, tackling and general all-round work were sound, and they packed plenty of dynamite, especially when they chose to buck the line. In Don Stewart and Downey they have a pair of ironmen who take a lot of stopping.

Neil Watson, Vancouver, refereed, and Dirk Wilson, Victoria, umpired. The teams: Vancouver—Lewis Du Temple, Stachler, McKenzie, Brown, Bartlett, Northey, Yrman, Chodet, Downey, Stewart, Archibald, Foggo, Pollock, McGuire, Moore, Small and Lund. Victoria—Usher, Drysdale, Colgate, Cox, De Blaquiere, Rogers, Wood, Stipe, Imrie, Gribble, Latta, Lemm, Nichol, McCallum, Simpson, Wright, White, Kinsman, Graham, Dempster, McInnes, Lowe and Marley.

BATTLE TO DRAW
VANCOUVER, Nov. 4 (CP).—A scrappy University of British Columbia team missed scoring their first victory of this year's Big Four Canadian football schedule by a single point today, but they held a bulky line-plugging crew from New Westminster to a 1-1 tie.

Varsity, with one of the greatest collegiate lines ever developed in the coast province, set to work early and ripped holes at will in their heavier opponents' defence, but faulty field generalship cost them a victory. The blue and gold warriors failed to take advantage of at least five scoring opportunities. They fought down the field in the first quarter three times to Westminster's ten-yard line, but each time instead

Wales and Ireland Battle to 1-1 Draw in Soccer Fixture

20,000 Spectators Watch International Soccer Teams Battle to Tie at Belfast—Glover Scores for Welsh and S. Jones for Irish BELFAST, Nov. 4 (CP).—Wales and Ireland battled to a 1-1 tie in their international soccer match here, this afternoon, before a crowd of 20,000 persons. The result of the encounter, fourth international match of the season, left Wales and Ireland tied in the lead with a win and a draw each. Ireland has also lost a match, England has won one. Scotland has lost two. Glover scored for the Welsh in the first half, and S. Jones scored for the Irish in the second.

Both Wales and Ireland showed many changes in their line-ups. Wales made seven changes from the team which beat Scotland previously, including fielding four new caps—D. Jones of Leicester, Day of Tottenham, Hamford of Swansea, and Mills of Clapton Orient.

THE LINE-UPS
Ireland had four changes in their international line-up. Both teams had as right halves, men who are reserves for their clubs. Line-ups: Ireland—Scott (Liverpool); Reid (Derby); Pulton (Belfast Celtic); W. Mitchell (Chelsea); Jones (Limerick) and S. Jones (Blackpool); E. Mitchell (Glenfort); Stevenson (Glasgow Rangers); Martin (Belfast Celtic); Coulter (Belfast) and Kelly (Derry).

Wales—Evans (Birmingham); Lawrence (Swansea) and D. Jones (Leicester); Day (Tottenham); Hanford (Swansea) and Richards (Wolverhampton); Phillips (Wolverhampton); O'Callaghan (Tottenham); Glover (Grimby); Mills (Clapton Orient) and Curtis (Birmingham).

The weather was fine as the game got under way. O'Callaghan, of the Spurs, captained Wales, won the toss. Scott captained the Irish. The start was slow. After five minutes, the Irish made an off-side appeal against Curtis, who had passed to Glover, the latter hanging the ball past Scott for the first goal. The appeal was allowed. Glover was allowed too much room in his manoeuvring, and he nearly scored again. Scott saved brilliantly, but Glover got a return pass and headed the ball in, making no mistake this time.

BACKS UNRELIABLE
Resuming, Phillips became most dangerous on the Welsh attacks, and he forced Scott to make a clever save in the first minute. Ireland lacked steam, but nevertheless found the Welsh backs unreliable when they were under pressure.

Ireland equalised in the tenth minute of the last half, when a Welsh back helped in S. Jones' header, sent in on a corner kick from Kelly.

DEFEAT VICTORIA WEST, 3-1; SAANICH BLANKS CITY, 1-0

Esquimalt Goes Into Undisputed First Place by Turning Back Hard-Fighting Greenshirts—Losers Fail to Take Early Advantages—Thistles Move Up

LEAGUE STANDING	W	L	D	F	A	P
Esquimalt	3	1	1	7	7
Saanich Thistles	3	2	0	6	6
Victoria West	2	2	1	10	9
Victoria City	1	4	0	6	12

Failing to take advantage of conditions in the opening half when they were kicking down the slope and with the sun blinding in their opponents' eyes, Victoria West went down to their second defeat of the season, yesterday afternoon, at Beacon Hill in the first division of the Pacific Coast Football League before Esquimalt by a 3 to 1 score. The win gives the dockers possession of first place in the race for the first half honors. Saanich Thistles went into second position by blanking Victoria City in the other match at Heywood Avenue, 1 to 0, in a somewhat ragged exhibition.

Although the Esquimalt eleven finished two goals to the good, the greenshirts deserved at least a draw. They fought hard to the last minute and with the brilliant goal tending of Louis de Costa, plus a rugged defence, saved the dockers time and again, especially in the second half, when they were continuously on the offensive. Esquimalt were dangerous at all times and harassed their opponents' back division with their powerful attacks. Jack Okell, left fullback, turned in a great game for the West, breaking up countless attacks by splendid kicking.

MISS CHANCES

Kicking down the grade and the sun in their favor, the greenshirts attacked from the opening whistle. In the first few minutes Harry Youson passed up two great chances in front of the net by missing, while Robinson added a pair of wicked shots over the bar by being too anxious. The Wests two wing-men were weak and several well-engineered rushes went for nothing as the game progressed. The first goal came after Art Griffiths, new goalie, had made some fine clearances when Mike Wagland took a long cross from Mearns and beat the Wests' netminder with a rapid shot to the corner. Shortly after the centre, Robinson followed up a mauling by March, but drove wide with De Costa at his mercy.

EQUALIZES SCORE

Mungrave and Robinson both had their share of the goalkeeping, and then Ernie Betteridge took Barnes' pass and equalized with a fast drive from well inside the penalty area. Play pepped up from then on, with both goals being subjected to several close calls. Barney Barnswell, left winger, put Esquimalt in the lead shortly before the interval with a fast shot, which Griffiths looked as if he had well covered up, but the ball dropped fast and slipped through the goalie's legs.

Not long after the start of the second half, Esquimalt made two changes. Williams going on for March, and Mottishaw taking Mearns' place at right wing. Esquimalt attacked furiously during the opening minutes, but the Wests' defence stood up under the pressure and cleared at every opportunity.

SAVES PENALTY

Betteridge had tough luck on one of the greenshirts' offensives when he smashed a sure marker against the crossbar and rebounded for him at left half. Geoghean was only on the field a few minutes when he committed a penalty.

John Watt was assigned to the spot kick, but Griffiths made a sensational save and cleared to the side. In the next few minutes, Griffiths made some great saves from Stewart, Mall, Wagland and Sweeney, and then the Wests went away and attacked furiously, with De Costa saving Esquimalt numerous times.

The Wests had a great chance to deadlock the score when Williams fouled Gibbons heavily in the penalty area. Roy Barnes drove the awarded shot straight into the arms of De Costa. Dave Stewart went back in the game in Geoghean's place, but he was not recovered from his collision with Mearns. Esquimalt's last goal came shortly before the finish, Mall driving through on a cross from Barnswell.

Swan refereed and teams follow: Esquimalt—De Costa, Joe Watt, March, Williams, John Watt, Sweeney, Boyd, Mearns, Stewart, Mall, Wagland, Barnswell and Mottishaw.

Victoria West—Griffiths, Okell, Storey, Cockin, Barnes, Stewart, Geoghean, Youson, Mungrave, Robinson, Betteridge and Gibbons.

THISTLES WIN

In the contest between Saanich Thistles and Victoria City, which ended 1-0 in favor of the former team, had blood rose early and considerable unimportant play was shown. Tempers of the players were on edge throughout the game, and Referee Saunders had difficulty in handling the game. Tommy Smith and Fred Price were ruled off the field in the first half for fighting.

Combination plays were not featured, and the players handed up a poor game when they persisted in making long kicks and driving the ball out of bounds. Both goalies had little trouble in clearing the ball the few times it came within reach.

The Thistles received their opportunity to score when a penalty kick was allowed early in the game, when Pepin punched the ball down near his own goal. Gibbons came in to drive the ball past Goellie Farquhar on the free kick.

Saanich continued to push until half-time, but they lacked the necessary combination to come within scoring distance. On two occasions, the Thistles piled up in front of the City goal, but Harper, fullback, and Farquhar handled the situations well.

Following are line-ups of the teams:

WISSEL AND J. WALTHOUR TAKE GRIND

German Rider and New York Boy Win at Chicago—Peden Second

CHICAGO, Nov. 5 (AP).—Ewald Wissel, of Germany, and Jimmy Walthour, Jr., of New York, won Chicago's thirtieth International six-day bicycle race, which ended at 12:04 a.m. this morning.

Previous to winning tonight's race, Wissel finished third in a six-day race which ended in Toronto last Saturday night. He flew to Chicago to substitute for Freddie Spencer, who was to have been Walthour's partner. Wissel and Walthour covered 3,211 miles, 9 laps, and scored 612 points.

Wissel and Walthour, by marvelous sprinting, won the race in the last ten minutes of the grind by gaining a lap.

PEDEN SECOND

William "Torchy" Peden, of Victoria, and Alfred Letourner, of France, finished in second place, scooping 1,040 points and beating out the teams of George Dempsey, of Brooklyn, and Bobby Thomas, of Kenosha, Wis., as well as vino Reboli, of Newark, N.J., and Giovanni Manera, of Italy, who covered one lap less than the leaders. Dempsey and Thomas accounted for 671 points, while Reboli and Manera scored 310 points.

Dave Lands, of Irvington, N.J., and Tony Schaller, of Chicago, were two laps behind in fifth place, while Normal Hill, of San Jose, Cal., and Gerard Debarts, of Belgium, finished in sixth place, two laps behind the leaders. Reggie McNamara, the iron man of the sport, and Charley Winter, of New York, were three laps behind the leaders.

CALGARY AND WINNIPEG ENTER GRID FINAL

Altomahs Nose Out Meralomas 13 to 11 In Exciting Match

Calgary Rallies in Last Quarter to Defeat British Columbia Grid Champions—Seven-Year Reign of Regina Roughriders Ended by Winnipeg, 11-1—Prairie Squad Off Color

CALGARY, Nov. 4 (CP).—Perseverant application of brute force and the old principle of two backs and a kick today gave Calgary Altomahs a 13-11 victory over Vancouver Meralomas and the right to meet Winnipeg in the Western Canada Rugby final.

An enthusiastic crowd of 3,000 watched a pretty display of fast open field running and kicking in the English style gradually being worn down by the force of the Calgary attack. Vancouver succumbed in the last half after they had piled up a lead of 11-6 in the first two quarters.

Both teams scored two touchdowns apiece, but Altomahs bucked their way to a margin with a couple of ruses and a kick into touch in goal.

In the early rushes of the game, as the Coast boys swarmed all over the field at the top of their speed, McKenzie, star kicking half of the Altomahs, who carried the brunt of the Vancouver attack throughout the game, fumbled his catch behind the Altomah line and Rellie fell on the ball for a five-point Meraloma lead.

NIBLO ROUSED Niblo failed to get out from behind in the second quarter, and Calgary took a point for a ruse. A few minutes later the Coast team's star running half again failed his mates when he dropped a catch and Calgary made it a touch.

Vancouver took the lead again a few minutes later with the simplest and neatest play of the day. Meralomas staged a fake end run towards the posts and while Calgary were rushed to break it up, Rellie stepped across the line, caught a short forward pass, and put it to the ground uninterupted for a touch. Ellis converted.

Calgary's bucking began to take effect in the third quarter, and Meralomas scored no more points. Friend downed Niblo for a ruse shortly before three-quarter time.

Half way through the last period the stands instantly demanded for a touch was rewarded. Thompson and Williams put on a series of plunges that enabled Thompson to hurdle over the Vancouver line from the yard out. One minute to go, the Altomahs were assured of victory when they added another point as McKenzie kicked into touch in goal.

RIDERS' REIGN ENDS WINNIPEG, Nov. 4 (CP).—The seven-year supremacy of the Regina Roughriders terminated this afternoon here in convincing fashion when Carl Cronin, ex-Notre Dame backfielder, coached and power-played his Winnipeg team to the Western Canada senior Rugby final. The Ritchie-handled Winnipeg team, led by Cronin, defeated the Regina Roughriders 11-1 in a thrilling match at the University of Regina stadium.

The Regina Roughriders, who had won the title for seven years, were defeated by the Winnipeg team, who were coached by Carl Cronin, a former player for the Regina Roughriders.

Jack Dempsey to Appear in City As Mat Arbiter

THE one-time "Manassa Mauler," Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion of the world, will appear in Victoria for the first time at the end of this month or early in December, when he will referee a wrestling match to be in the Horse Show Building at the Willows. Fred Richardson, of the Willows Athletic Club, made this announcement yesterday, stating that arrangements had been completed for Dempsey's appearance in Victoria. Two first-class matmen will be signed for the main event, and final plans for the show will be announced later.

MEETING MAY ASK CHANGE OF OLYMPICS

Amateur Union of Canada in Favor of Withdrawing Games From Germany

TORONTO, Nov. 4 (CP).—Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, at its forthcoming meeting, may oppose holding the next Olympic games in Germany, says Lou Marsh in The Star today. F. J. Mulqueen, president of the Canadian Olympic committee, as saying:

"The Olympic committee certainly is much interested in the proposition to withdraw the games from Berlin and Germany. In fact, it would not surprise me to see the A.A.U. of C. at its annual meeting this month pronounce in favor of the withdrawal of the games from Germany. Discrimination against any nationality or denomination cannot be countenanced, particularly in sport."

"It is idle to say there will be no discrimination in Germany in the matter of the Olympic games. Just how difficult would it be for us to place in competition in Berlin in 1936 the Canadian 1936 edition of a Fanny Rosenfeld or a Harry Clemm?"

The Olympic committee chairman was quoted as saying the matter had been discussed by committee officials, adding the hope conditions would undergo such a change "drastic action would not be necessary."

Remember When

(Twenty-Five Years Ago)

The outlook for close competition in the three local basketball leagues, namely, the intermediate, junior, and the question which is most discussed these days in sporting circles. The consensus of opinion appears to be that the organization of the Y.M.C.A. will prove that there are sufficient numbers of teams to form the three divisions and keep competition as expected throughout the season. In the senior section there will be the J.B.A.A. Victoria, there will be the J.B.A.A. Victoria, there will be the J.B.A.A. Victoria.

Victoria's football team will battle Nanaimo Saturday afternoon in a Pacific Coast League fixture at the Royal Athletic Park. It was announced yesterday by Secretary

Boston Bruins to Have Strong Team For Coming Season

Manager Art Ross Has Twenty-Two Players Seeking Places on Squad—Holding Out of Shore Presenting Defence Problem

QUEBEC, Nov. 4 (CP).—The powerful Boston hockey machine that each season clicks smoothly through the National Hockey League schedule with hardly a miss, and usually comes to rest far from the top, is temporarily under repairs while a few new parts are being ground to fit. Manager Art Ross has been doing a great deal of chin scratching the past few days, as his twenty-two young athletes speed up and down the Quebec Arena ice. Some may go to Boston. Trades and sales have removed several component parts, and Ross must make up his mind which players he is going to fit into the gaps before his team can get down to its regular smooth, powerful functioning.

Tiny Thompson will be in the net again. Young Percy Jackson, of the Cubs, has been working out with the Bruins in training sessions here, but Thompson has been showing all his old form. Eddie Shore, husky Bruin defence star, and one of the highest-paid hockey players in the game, has failed to report for practice here, and, worse still, has not accepted the contract mailed him. Ross announced Eddie, still on his ranch

Berkeley. This means that the two Victoria and District League matches will be put off until later in the season. A big crowd is expected to witness the powerful Up-Island club perform against Victoria's all-star eleven. The locals are given an even chance of coming through with a victory.

Definite word was received here regarding the formation of a Y.M.C.A. Northwest basketball league, with teams from Victoria, Seattle, Portland, Everett, Bellingham, Tacoma and Vancouver. The schedule was released here yesterday and appears in these columns. Victoria's team will be powerful with the following to select from: Bob Whyte, Johnny Peden, R. McKittick, F. Harding, D. Brooks, J. Pettier, Fred McDougall, C. Mason, P. Johnson and L. Spencer. Mason will captain the team and Whyte will be vice-president of the club.

Last evening, Oscar Mortimore, the colored heavyweight pugilist, who has challenged Al McNamee to a special bout, to be held here in the near future, was given a workout at the Victoria West Gymnasium. According to information, the bout is not definite, it is expected that the Victoria West Association will promote the fight.

BABE RUTH WILL TAKE REST AFTER HONOLULU VISIT

HONOLULU, Nov. 4 (AP).—Weary and worn out, Babe Ruth, who came to Hawaii a fortnight ago for a vacation, departed today for New York, seeking a rest.

His legs and arms were sunburned from a fishing trip, on which his catch was about of a size to fill his coat pocket. As he boarded the steamer Lurline for San Francisco, with his wife and daughter, Julia, the Bambino said:

"I am going straight to New York to rest. I'll get going to work from today. I am going to sleep a week."

Crystal Garden Is Scene of Swimming Contest by Guides

Big Gallery of Spectators Follows Splendidly Organized Programme of Aquatic Events—East Victoria District Champion

The Crystal Garden was the scene of an animated gathering yesterday afternoon, when about 125 Guides and Brownies, watched by a gallery of about 1,000 spectators, gathered for the South Vancouver Island divisional Guide swimming competition. The lively enthusiasm of the many teenage onlookers gave a wonderful edge to an already keen competitive spirit of team and individual entrants, and from first to last the affair was well worth watching. A salvo of applause followed the announcement, at the end of the afternoon, that East Victoria district, of which Mrs. L. A. Genge is commissioner, had carried off the district championship trophy, and First Victoria West Rangers (Miss Stewart) Williams captain, the trophy offered for highest aggregate company points.

Mrs. Alan Morkill, provincial commissioner, presented the prizes, and among the other Guide and Brownie officers present were Mrs. H. R. Gale, divisional commissioner; Mrs. Genge, commissioner for Victoria East; Miss H. Leighton, Guide and Club adviser for the province, who was responsible for the splendidly organized arrangements; Mrs. P. E. Corby, secretary of the local Guide association; and Mrs. George Watt, vice-president of the local association, who deputized for the president, Mrs. Kyrie Symon.

A distinguished visitor, Miss Wilson, a "red corset," just arrived from Scotland, was formally welcomed very early in the proceedings by the provincial commissioner, Mrs. Morkill, and a guard of honor composed of the patrol leaders from each company in the division. Mrs. M. Sills was in charge of the guard.

Some good diving and swimming was seen. The relay races were particularly exciting, and in the case of the Brownies, quite amusing also, some of the little girls, in their quest to win, swimming rather wide of the course. By excellent organization, with company captains in charge of the Guides, and Brownies in charge of the Brownies, the various details worked out with utmost smoothness. The judges were Messrs. Stuel and Hiberson and Mr. and Mrs. Ellison.

THE RESULTS The following are the complete results of the various competitions: Forty Feet (Under Eleven Years), for Challenge Cup—1, B. Unsworth; 2, P. Pritchard; 3, B. Sloan.

District Relay Races, Six Teams Competing—Victoria West: 1, Rangers (Scott, Ellis, Cooper and Dale-Johnson); 2, 8th West (Marling, Simpson, Weston and Muir). East Victoria: 1, 6th East (Swift, Bucklin, White and Angus); 2, 4th East (Trump, Pile, Webber and Stanier). Brownies on Back, Forty Feet (Challenge Cup)—1, B. Unsworth; 2, P. Pritchard; 3, L. Minnis.

Life Saving Competition (Heads)—West Victoria: 1, Rangers (J. Pett and Dale Johnson); East Victoria: 1, 6th East (P. Jones and K. Aikens); Brownies Relay Race (Challenge Cup)—1, Gonzales (McKiershan, Walls, Griggs and Unsworth); 2, St. Margaret's (Sloan, Kidd, Ker and Allen); 3, Esquimalt (Willows, Gray, H. Grier and Morrison).

Fifty Yards (Under Sixteen)—First heat: 1, M. Trump (4th East); 2, M. White (6th East); 3, D. Manning (4th West); 4, J. Roy; 5, M. Wood; 6, D. Gladstone. Eighty Feet (Under Fourteen)—1, M. Bucklin (6th East); 2, M. Dewhurst (1st East); 3, A. Morrison (4th East).

Diving for Potatoes—First heat: 1, the whistle ended the game.

Australian Horse Takes Handicap by Two-Length Margin

Great Sprinter From "Down Under" Runs Six Furlongs in 1:11 Flat to Win Second Start in Week—Galloping Easily at Finish of Handicap Event on Eastern Track

PIMLICO, Md., Nov. 4 (CP).—Winooka, Australian champion and wonder horse, ran a smashing race here today to win the special Invitation Handicap at six furlongs. Coming from behind at the half-way mark with a blinding burst of speed, the Aussie forged to the front to win by two lengths in the fast time of 1:11.

The five-year-old sprint marvel defeated four hand-picked thoroughbreds selected for the invitation event which had a value of $2,500. It was Winooka's second win of the week here. Today he left no doubt as to his class. Trailing him came Mrs. S. H. Fairbank's Gold Step, which was second, and the Catwara Farm's Good Advice, the third-place horse. Tambour and Springsteel were also ran.

Winooka proved much the best horse in the race. He broke fast, but Edgar Britt, his jockey from Down Under, held him in restraint until the turn out of the back stretch when he assumed command to keep it. The big horse was galloping easily as he crossed the line.

BANDS WILL ATTEND GAME

Many New Attractions When Fifth Meets Sixteenth Armistice Day

Many new features are expected to be added to the colorful programme next Saturday, when the 5th Brigade and Canadian Scottish senior English Rugby teams will battle once more for the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup.

Saturday's tussle at Athletic Park will be the third "army" game to be staged since the cup was donated by Hon. J. W. Fordham Johnson, and so far neither team has been able to cop the silverware.

TWO BANDS

Both bands are expected to be in attendance at the big game, while many of the supporters will probably take the grandstand in uniform, adding color to the occasion. A new feature of this year's game will be the souvenir programmes containing sketches of the players on both teams and the distribution of colored rosettes to supporters of the "Fifth" and the "Sixteenth."

A number of new faces will appear on the line-ups of both squads, and some of the star players will be absent. Among these are Muzz Patrick and Frank Skillings, of the Fifth, and Campbell and Don Forbes, of the 16th. The loss of WILKESON Redmen, of Wilkeson, Washington, a squad which finished third in the Northwest basketball tournament last year at Tacoma, will provide the opposition for the Blue Ribbons, Canadian champions, at the High School Gymnasium, November 17, it was announced yesterday by President Jack Taylor, of the city cage league. Little is known of the visitors except that they are somewhat small in stature but are speedy and well experienced in all departments of the game. Two preliminaries will round out the card.

Beats World Mark For 1,500 Metres

MILAN, Italy, Nov. 4 (AP).—Luigi Beccali, Italy's 1,500-metre Olympic champion, today shaved one and one-tenth seconds off the world's mark for 1,000 yards, as he stepped the distance in 2:10.1, over a heavy track. The old mark of 2:11.2 was made in 1929 by C. Ellis, of England. Ellis opposed Beccali in today's race, but was forced out by the grueling pace 400 yards from the finish line.

Tottenham Hotspurs Defeat Albions by 2-1 to Widen Lead

'Spurs Take Full-Game Edge in English First Division When Arsenal Draws With Portsmouth—Motherwell in Another Victory

LONDON, Nov. 4 (CP).—Tottenham Hotspurs improved their lead in the championship division of the English Football League, today, to a full game, as they trimmed West Bromwich Albion, 2-1, while the Arsenal, champions, were being held to a 1-1 tie by Portsmouth.

Huddersfield Town went up into a tie with the Arsenal, two points back of the Spurs, by beating Everton, 1-0, though the toffee-towners had famous "Dixie" Dean back in the line-up after an absence of many weeks.

Port Vale emerged undisputed leaders of the Second Division when they eked out a 2-0 victory over Oldham Athletic. Bolton Wanderers, who had been enjoying a tie with the Vale, slipped into third place, losing 1-0 at Southampton. Second place was gained by Grimsby Town, who won, 1-0, at Millwall.

Of the three deadlocked leaders in the Third Division, only Norwich City pulled out a victory, beating Cardiff City, 2-0, at home. Both Charlton Athletic and Crystal Palace were left behind by Queen's Park Rangers, who gained second place at the expense of Charlton.

Chesterfield continued their winning ways in the Northern Section, trouncing Rotherham, 3-1, to lengthen their lead to six points. In the highest scoring match of the day, Stockport County lambasted Southport, 9-2, to get into second place.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE

GLASGOW, Nov. 4 (CP).—They can't stop Motherwell. Playing their sixteenth game in the First Division of the Scottish Football League, Motherwell today defeated Dundee, 3-2, to maintain intact their unbeaten record. The closest the league have even come to defeat this season was in two matches where they were held to a draw.

Rangers, league champions, continued sturdily in chase of the top-notchers, however, with a 3-1 win over Clyde that kept them only four points, or two games, back of Motherwell.

Aberdeen and Kilmarnock fought out their tie for third place, and the home side won, beating Kilmarnock, 2-0.

Stenhousemuir went into a full-game lead in the Second Division, winning 1-0 over Morton. Arbroath and Dunfermline moved up into a tie for second place over the heads of King's Park and Morton.

CITY MARKET IS AGAIN CROWDED

Shrubs and Bulbs Are Popular
Sellers—Fall Vegetables and Meats in Demand
Fine weather brought another big crowd to the City Market yesterday, and with produce prices at good levels, many of the stalls were almost entirely cleared by 1 o'clock. Bulbs of all kinds were again popular sellers, while a number of stalls showed shrubs and bedding plants which were in fair demand.

All fall vegetables were in good demand, and prepared dairy products, including cream cheeses, were also among the heavy sellers. All classes of meats sold well. While poultry was more popular than ever, with a number of dealers displaying squabs.

Candies, cakes, pastries and cooked foods were all commanding their usual attention.

BUTTER AND FLOUR
PRICES ARE HIGHER

VANCOUVER, Nov. 4 (AP).—Butter prices have been advanced 1 cent a pound today in Vancouver, the new quotations on the wholesale market being 25c for cartons, 24c for prints, and 23c for solids. There has also been a further advance in flour. On the wholesale market the price is up to a barrel, being now $5.75 per barrel, making the popular 40-lb. sack $1.43 3-4, as against $1.41 1-4 formerly.

NEW SYSTEM OF NAMING PLANES

Air Ministry to Christen Machines After Oceans, Seas and Estuaries

Under a new system of nomenclature, recently introduced by the Air Ministry, all torpedo-carrying aircraft intended for service with the fleet air arm are to be named after oceans, seas, or estuaries. Similarly, all flying-boats in the R.A.F. are to bear names of coastal towns and seaports of the British Empire.

As a result of this order, fourteen new high-speed torpedo-bombers now in course of construction for naval use, will be given the type name of Baffin, derived from Baffin Bay, in the far north of Canada.

The new "Baffins" are a greatly improved and much faster version of the torpedo-bombers which have formed part of the standard equipment of the fleet air arm for some years.

Each will be capable of carrying a torpedo weighing about three-quarters of a ton, and will have a top speed of over 136 miles per hour, with a non-stop range of 420 miles. The first flying-boat type to be christened under the new system is the Iris VI, whose name has now been changed to Perth. The largest airplane in the Royal Air Force, the Perth, is driven by three engines totaling nearly 2,500 horsepower and, fully laden, weighs more than fifty tons.

A fleet of these machines is to fly from Plymouth to their base at Malta before the end of the year.

SHORT STORY COMPETITION IS ARRANGED

Literary Contest Is Open to Young People of Vancouver Island

Princess Pats' New Magazine

By MARION I. ANGUS
The third appearance of the quarterly called The Princess Pats is a worthy effort on the part of its editors. While primarily the organ of the Princess Pats, the table of contents should interest a wide circle of readers. Humor, fiction, military gossip, sports, music, etc., are all included in the satisfying bill of mental fare.

The editorials and regimental notes are written in a subtly humorous vein. Victoria's latest acquisition, the sea serpent, finds an interested admirer in ye editor, who discourses entertainingly on the subject.

The music critic tells of his interview with the hard-hearted editor, and threatens to go on strike—but he doesn't. The various musical highlights of the past few months are ably recorded, and future concert notes for the benefit of music lovers.

News of former members of the Patricia and a history department, dealing with the memorable days of September 15-17, 1916, as well as regimental letters from Winnipeg and Vancouver, are very readable.

"Presentiment," a short story by Leslie Morrison dealing with the fight game, holds the suspense until the end, which is a real surprise. We enjoyed the cartoon, especially the "Problems of War," which is just our idea of one of the "lighter" moments in the trenches.

The poem to the Garden-Loyd intrigued us immensely. A baby tank! What next will be reduced to a miniature scale? Not let us sincerely hope, this well-rounded and entertaining periodical.

Posters Used to Show Menace of Forts and Fleets

NEW YORK, Nov. 4 (AP).—The liner Ballin arrived today with two of its bulletin boards bearing illustrated Nazi bulletins, one designed to set forth the defencelessness of Germany in the face of increasing alien forts on her frontiers, and the second showing Germany to be encompassed with hostile air fleets. It was understood in shipping circles the posters were placed on all German ships as part of a programme explaining Germany's position with regard to armaments.

Family jars won't do for preserving peace.

CANADIAN AUTHORS PROVIDING WIDEST FIELD FOR READERS

Coming Week to Mark Campaign for Recognition of Dominion Writers and Their Literary Works—Victoria Association Is Sponsoring Movement Throughout the City and District

CANADIAN Book Week, an annual event of ever-increasing importance, will be held this year between November 5 and 11. Originally instituted by the Canadian Authors' Association several years ago, it has now become a recognized movement, sponsored with the aim of educating the public in the ability of Canadian authors, and the wealth and variety of material at their disposal.

It is the aim of Book Week, not only to introduce the works of the writers in question, but to acquaint their readers with the personalities behind the facile pen that portray the hopes, ambitions and inner life of a young and growing country. In many cases the story of their struggle toward ultimate success reads as a saga of barriers surpassed and apparently unmountable difficulties overcome.

It is often said that Canada is a country with little or no past, and consequently the field for material and ideas is not as extensive as that which presents itself to writers of a land, hedged about with tradition and ancient memories. Nevertheless, the writer who can paint a word picture of the beauty, the wildness and the primitive cruelty of the unconquered barrens, together with the history of courage, enterprise and indomitable courage, with which the pioneers of yesterday met the challenge of nature, has almost unlimited scope for his talents.

The Canadian author has within his grasp such an opportunity for portrayal of human nature, when faced by the whole gamut of emotions, hope, ambition, triumph, defeat and despair, that it is in his power to build up a field of literature that is as new as the country he writes of, with a freshness and a power that is unattainable for a writer in the old land.

In the drive toward a wider recognition of Canadian literature the Canadian Authors' Association has received the whole-hearted support of the press, church, schools, broadcasting stations, libraries and every conceivable method of publicity. The success achieved since the movement was first set afoot is evident in the increased "literary consciousness" evinced by the Canadian people and consequent cultural development.

Committed for Counterfeiting

KAMLOOPS, B.C., Nov. 4 (CP).—Ed. Baker and Stanley Wray appeared before Stipendiary Magistrate D. W. Rowlands, and were committed for trial on a charge of having in their possession moulds for making counterfeit coins, and also for having twenty-five and fifty-cent counterfeit pieces.

Sweeping assertions are liable to raise clouds of trouble.

What's New in Bookland

By MARION I. ANGUS

"Apples of the Moon" (Thomas Allen), by Ethel Kirk Grayson.

The usual adjectives do not seem to apply to this intricate story of the human elements found in a provincial university town. One feels, somehow, that the characters are very real, and that they could be placed with equal success in any cultured sphere of life. Their mistakes, petty jealousies and virtues are indulgent to most people. Their passions and noble or ignoble longings lie concealed in most hearts.

As an aftermath of the Great War, lovely Monica St. Dennis finds herself the guest of her father-in-law, the kindly doctor, and his two daughters, Deirdre and Noreen. She accepts a position as assistant French teacher at Fairhaven, where petty intrigues and personal jealousies seeth restlessly below an apparently placid surface.

Monica, in her heart the true story of the death of her soldier-husband, finds herself drawn to Professor Paul Girard, who is unhappily married to the enigmatic Judith, whose life has been full of bitterness. Unwittingly, Monica incurs the enmity of Henry Oakley, suave philanthropist and implacable foe, and is thereby drawn closer to Paul.

Other complications arise when Florence Lundy, long social arbiter at Fairhaven, finds that her "Blessed Damocles" pose is quite out of date, and that students no longer fall in awe of her at her feet. She attributes much of the change to Monica, whom she considers an interpolator and does not hesitate to reveal her hatred at a dramatic meeting where Monica's directorship of the Little Theatre is being discussed.

The story shifts to Montreal and the romantic coast of Gaspe and involves tragedy and happiness. The subtle delineations of character, the appeal to the thoughtful reader, and the whole book is an embodiment of what most people mean when they say "sophisticated." And it is decidedly worth reading.

"Poems," by members of the Vancouver Poetry Writers' Group.

This delightful little booklet contains selections from the work of this group for the years of 1931-1933. The standard of the poems used is unusually good, and while some poems naturally do not appeal to this reviewer as much as others, there are none that should be deleted. Maile Nelson has a delicate, lyrical touch that successfully employs color and imagery. Hylda Kathleen Wheeler sings tunelessly of Kentish orchards and Irish themes. Charles Hill-Tout employs a more philosophical vein, while Jean Whitman Halsey brings a delightful fairy element into her "The Green Glow."

Mary Elizabeth Colman is virile in her poem "The Hermit and the Mountebank." Who Walked With God? Lex McKillop employs a more sombre note in his "Escape." R. L. Firth and Mary L. Istad mould charmingly of life and beauty. Irene Moody has two strongly contrasted poems. In "Rebel" she protests:

"I'm tired, God; tired of the strife of life;
Tired of my fellow men and man-made ways
Tired of my fragile body; even more
My hyper-sensitive self . . .
But in 'The Loyalty of My Friends,' she feels:

"So precious the jade screen, that it were better
To go hungry and cold than to part with it willingly.
The loyalty of my friends is treasured beyond the death of the body."

It goes with me into the Way of the Stars.

Special mention should be made of the delightful picture "Lilies," by Guy Glover, and "Delphiniums," by Edna Douglas Fearn. The latter is quoted:
O tall, dew-drenched delphiniums,
My garden fades at eve in mists of blue because of you;
At morn I saw your tapers burn with pale blue smoke.
The sun from blazoned windows
Upon an altar white, bedecked with fern.

Mrs. Fearn's "Drunkens" is graphic though somewhat morbid. Evelyn Brown, L. C. Teeple and Edward Harper are also contributors of poems of merit.

"Colored Sands" (Lions Gate Press), by Alice Harper.

This small booklet contains poems of varying tones. The title is especially good, while "The Last Mass," a tale of the Riel Rebellion, is an ambitious effort. Some of the poems reflect the religious teachings of the Buddhists, Taoists and French-Canadians. The following poem, "Mated," has attracted much attention:

There is no other world outside the bands
Of our circling arms: Your tender hands
Reveal new lands.
Of ecstasy, I feel my life-blood run
To fill your heart. Yours is the soul
Of me.

And we are one.

"Pat of Silver Bush" (McClelland & Stewart), L. M. Montgomery.

Another charming tale from the pen of the author of the ever-popular "Anne of Green Gables." The story centres around Silver Bush, a homestead on Prince Edward Island, and is a glamorous exposition of youth and first love with Pat as the delightful heroine.

"Tales of the British Columbia Frontier" (Ryerson Press), by William Ward Spinks.

This book, which is just off the Ryerson Press, was reviewed in detail in last Sunday's Colonist. As the stories give the authentic atmosphere of pioneer days in British Columbia, this book should have a wide appeal both among old-timers and recent arrivals here. The tales are graphically told in a virile and authoritative manner, not surprising when one learns the author himself figures prominently in many of the stories.

"The Splendid Silence" (John Murray), by Alan Sullivan.

This recent book, by a Canadian author resident in England, has a British Columbia setting, as most of the action takes place in one of the pulp mill towns of the Mainland.

The young hero, Duncan Seymour, thinking he has secret knowledge of his father's new wife, severs his relationship with his father and takes his "splendid silence" with him to Western Canada. There he encounters life very different from life as he had known it at home and his sense of values alters accordingly. A delightful love story adds a touch of romance to the grim climax. A gripping tale.

"The Gleaner Girl" (McClelland & Stewart), by Ralph Connor.

In his latest book, Ralph Connor has once more turned to the pine forests bordering Ottawa in Northern Ontario, and has written a story of humble and pathos, love and hate, that is the equal of any of his earlier and most popular books. The story, briefly, deals with young Sally Rivers, who has inherited her father's properties, consisting of a pine forest, a furniture factory and a tannery. The hero, who hails from Montreal, has been forced by his father into the bond business, but a chance meeting with the charming Sally is the beginning of a romance of exceptional interest. The action is well-sustained, and the book promises to be one of the best sellers in the Canadian Fall list.

Ralph Connor, who is Dr. Gordon, of Winnipeg, was elected national president of the Canadian Authors' Convention at Quebec in June. He went overseas with the members of the association on their famous first Canadian Authors' Convention held in Great Britain.

Security Prices Little Changed At Wall Street

NEW YORK, Nov. 4 (AP).—Stocks drifted aimlessly today. The general list, notwithstanding further improvement by rails, was unable to extend Friday's recovery, but sales by profit-takers were absorbed with little difficulty and such dips as appeared were mostly fractional. The average net change was a small loss.

Dollar exchange failed to reflect noticeable degree the familiar daily mark-up in the R.F.C.'s gold price, which this morning amounted to the nominal rise of 10 cents. Dollars in fact, were at times lower in terms of some gold units, especially the French franc.

Mining stocks continued to drag downward. Today, U.S. Smelters lost more than 2 points, but fractional losses generally measured the extent of declines in others.

Steel shares were somewhat soggy. U.S. Steel giving about a third of yesterday's gain. American Telephone's rise of Friday apparently served to bring out additional offerings and the stock dipped more than a point. Allied Chemical lost 1-1/4.

Those who take their market guidance from action of the rail shares felt encouraged by firmness in that section, which until yesterday had been neglected for a considerable period. Several carriers included New York Central, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Baltimore & Ohio improved fractions to a point. Union Pacific was steady.

Rail shares felt encouraged by firmness in that section, which until yesterday had been neglected for a considerable period. Several carriers included New York Central, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific and Baltimore & Ohio improved fractions to a point. Union Pacific was steady.

Volume was somewhat above that of recent Saturdays at $6,643,000 and the average price of sixty domestic corporation issues declined 1 of 8 points.

CLAIMS RECORD OF EGG-LAYING CANARY

EDMONTON, Nov. 4 (CP).—Maggie, two-year-old Norwich canary owned by Mrs. E. T. Whiting, of Edmonton, has laid twenty-eight eggs in her career.

When papers blazed forth with front page stories about the British Columbia hen, Dauntless Doreen, who had equalled the existing pullet egg-laying record, Maggie thought it was time to crow.

Anyway, Maggie thinks she has a record. In her short span of two years, one of which was devoted to becoming mature, she has laid twenty-eight eggs, and the mortality rate has been very low.

YU'ANHEE SEE LAUGHS

by Sax Rohmer

CHAPTER XIX
The Armenian dropped to his knees in a flash, whisked around, drew a pistol from his pocket with miraculous agility, and fired as he crouched!

Crack of two shots came together. Joseph dropped his automatic, his arms and legs outstretched forward into the Bath of Feathers! A stifled cough came up from the drugged pit.

Halg stood still—listening. To the sickly sweet fumes had been added the tang of powder. He visualized the street outside and realized that interference was unlikely. Clouds of feathery dust were rising from the Bath.

He circled around to the door. The key was still in the lock. He opened it. A flight of wooden steps led downwards. Descending, he found himself in a small square cellar. On his right was a stout low door communicating with the base of the pit. Before him he saw a narrow packing case—undoubtedly designed as his coffin!

Eileen woke from a troubled dream, vaguely wondering what was obstructing the porthole of her cabin. Something to do with Dr. Oestler. Was it that Dr. Oestler was standing between herself and the porthole—or was he standing outside on the deck? Certainly he had some part in it, although she could not actually see him.

An unfamiliar stewardess was holding her head, and very gently urging her to drink something.

"Halg, chief inspector Scotland Yard, on board?" That was a queer thing to think of. . . . Several years elapsed—or so she calculated—years of the most wretched suffering, mental and physical. At some time during this unaccountable period she realized the meaning of that awful premonition which had claimed her at the London docks. She saw a great ship sinking in a calm sea. There seemed to be a booming noise as the vessel dived into blackness. Terrified, she screamed, and seemed to hear the voice of Billy (who was "Billy"? She couldn't think who Billy was, only that she wanted him—wanted him desperately.) He said, "It's all right, darling. I'm here. . . . The kindly, unknown woman was there, soothing her, and she conceived a definite terror of Dr. Oestler. Words broke through her delirium. "Don't worry, my dear, don't worry. Have courage. While you are with me you are safe. . . ."

A Frenchwoman. There were no French stewardesses on the Wallaroo. . . . But when true awakening came, Eileen was unable to recognize it. She could not accept her surroundings. She saw a lofty room, one end of which was open. Beyond was a dower-laden balcony. It had four pillars—she counted them over and over again: One, two, three, four. They were stone or plaster, but partly concealed by flowers. Of course it couldn't be real!

She touched the silken coverlet of the bed on which she lay, pinched herself—detected the fragrance of clustering roses. She saw that there was a tray beside her bed, set upon a lacquer table, which contained a very comprehensible medicine bottle, a glass and a jug of water. Beside it was a big bowl of cut roses.

Wildly she stared across the room towards the balcony; but beyond she could see nothing but a cloudless sky. She was aware of an unfamiliar lassitude. Her limbs, too, had a leaden feeling. But, as the truth of her surroundings crashed in upon her mind, she threw off the coverings and sprang to the floor.

Dawson Halg started down at the long oblong box lying upon a mud brick floor. Respect for the efficiency of the Hee See gang began to claim him. Jo Lung, of Limehouse, was no more than a spoke in the wheel. Dr. Oestler was merely a looter. There was a directing intelligence greater than any of these, by whom the smallest detail was never neglected.

He marvelled at the man's knowledge of psychology—the man who had led him to seek for that other entrance upon the pretext of leaving the ship by a shorter route?

Something beyond doubt. He had been covered from the moment he left the ship. It had been decided that he should never return.

This oblong box was ready for him. It was packed with straw, a loose lid rested upon the floor beside it. A tin of nails, he saw, and a stout hammer. What had they planned to do with his body when it had been nailed in the box? Obviously the duty of the insidious Joseph, having hauled him out of the trap in the pit, had been to secure him in this coffin, and then—what?

Certain "porters" were coming for the crate "at sunset," she recalled. These "porters" must not see him. He must escape from the premises of Mohammed.

Mohammed. . . . That name had occurred in the diary of Yu'an Hee See! . . . and under the date of the Wallaroo's arrival at Port Said! Eileen's abduction had been planned in London!

"Calm, Billy!" he said aloud. "Pull yourself together. . . . Go easy."

He considered the trapdoor; and now he observed hanging upon a hook beside it a sort of grapping iron attached to a long rod. The door possessed two rings by which obviously it was intended to be raised; there was a big bolt at the top by means of which it might then be kept in place.

He hesitated no longer. Stepping forward, he grasped the rings, lifted the trapdoor, and secured the bolt. A suffocating stench from the feathers all but choked him. He took down the iron from its place on the wall, thrusting in through the mound and into the pit. He groped about until, sickeningly, the hook established contact with what he knew to be a human body—covered with feathers—suffocated in feathers—out came the victim.

One glance sufficed to show that the man was dead. His face was horrible to see. But Dawson Halg had little compassion to spare.

First—the keys! He found them. Next, he emptied all the dead man's pockets, transferring the contents haphazard to his own. Finally, he heaved the body into the straw-lined box and set the lid in place. Holes for some twenty nails were already bored in it. He nailed the lid down.

Then, lowering the heavy trap, he stood still, listening. There was no sound. Light came through an iron grate some three feet above his head, opening, so far as he could make out, upon a narrow, brick-enclosed courtyard. From this courtyard, doubtless, steps led down to the locked door of the cellar.

Footsteps sounded in the courtyard above. Halg darted lightly up the stairs, regained the passage, and there stood still, waiting.

Two men entered. They talked together in subdued voices in Arabic. He knew that they were removing the chest. Presently, heavy dragging footsteps told him that they were carrying it up the stairs to the courtyard beyond. He heard a dull bump as they laid it down. One of them returned and closed the door.

Muffled sounds, voices, and, finally—silence.

The Wallaroo had left her berth, and the pilot was taking her over the bow when Dawson Halg burst into the office of Shale, the British consul. The consul, standing just behind his desk, looked up.

"Thank God!" he exclaimed. "Inspector! you have found her!" Dawson Halg shook his head savagely. "But I know where she was kidnapped," he replied. "What I don't know is where she has been taken. But first of all, it is most important that my presence here shall not be known to a soul outside this office. Not a word that anyone has seen me! The gang we are up against think me dead, and I intend them to go on thinking it. Do you understand?"

The four men in the consul's of-ness signified that they understood. "I want Dr. Oestler and the woman Edman arrested at Suez," Shale merely nodded and made a note.

"I want you to get a party together," Halg went on rapidly. "I can easily describe the place they have to go to—and here are the keys. I have just escaped from there myself. I want it searched from roof to cellar, and I want the man Mohammed, who is supposed to be the proprietor, under lock and key some time tonight. Is that plain, Mr. Consul?"

The consul nodded and scribbled rapidly some notes upon a pad. This he thrust into the hand of one of the men. "For Captain Ellis! Bring him back as soon as ever you find him!"

"How do I get to Kener?" Halg demanded. "She may be there! Anyway, I'm going to see."

"I'll make arrangements—night train from Cairo," Shale pressed a bell button.

"In the meantime, as she's an American citizen, can I leave it to you to advise Mr. Porman, her consul?" Halg asked.

"I'm expecting him at any moment," Halg said.

"Good enough. Have you ever heard of a man called Hasen-es-Suk in connection with Kener?"

"No." The British consul shook his head thoughtfully. "But they may know in Cairo. I'm having you met there."

DELIVERY VAN IS ON DISPLAY

National Motors Showing Latest Type of English Vehicle

The National Motors, Limited, present for the inspection of the merchants of Victoria, a new English delivery vehicle of striking design and economy possibilities. It is the Raleigh light delivery van, which has been the subject of much favorable comment by English automotive journals, and is credited with substantially reducing transportation costs in many lines of industry.

The Raleigh is a three-wheel vehicle with an attractively designed body of forty-nine cubic feet capacity. Such a body has a load capacity up to 500 pounds, and is roomy enough for loads of groceries, meat, fish, vegetables, etc., and is pronounced ideal for laundries, dry-cleaners and others requiring transportation of light, bulky packages.

Fifty to sixty miles per gallon is claimed for the Raleigh light delivery. It has a single cylinder air-cooled motor with ample power for speedy delivery at load capacity. It not only affords economy in operation, but its initial cost is considerably lower than any four-wheel van on the market. Merchants and others who are interested in lowering merchandise delivery costs are invited by National Motors, Limited, to see this new English vehicle in their showrooms tomorrow.

An eleven captained by the lord of the manor was playing a match with the village club, and at the last minute the butler was roped in as umpire.

"How's that?" appealed the wicket-keeper for stumping whilst his lordship was batting.

"His lordship," remarked the butler, gravely, "is not in."

The Last of The Barons

BY M. H. HALTON

The grandeur of curious rock formations, such as this natural bridge, contribute to the beauty of the coastline of the tiny island of Sark. Right, the Dame of Sark, formerly Mrs. Dudley Beaumont, now married to Robert Woodward Hathaway, who is shown with her.

THE title is not exactly correct. For this article is not about a baron at all, but about a baroness, a woman who rules over a little British island and exercises full feudal rights over all the inhabitants, just as her ancestors did five hundred years ago—rights which the British House of Commons itself couldn't take away from her. You would probably have scoffed if anyone had told you that in the British Isles there was one island with a despotic woman ruler who still demands—and gets—her one sheep out of every ten that the veldts raise—so many fowls a year, so many "cabots" of wheat, so many bundles of oats, and the other tributes that the subjects of feudal tenure used to pay in the now almost forgotten days of the feudal system. But such an island exists.

This is the story of Sark Island. Now it is really not an island at all, it is a dream, and one of the most beautiful dreams I ever saw. It is a dream not only because it is so beautiful, but also because it is so very curious. Though it is only three miles long and a mile or so wide, it is full of enough curious things to fill a book—including the practice of black magic.

To correct myself once more, this strange little place called Sark is not one of the British Isles, but one of the Channel Islands, one of the Jersey and Guernsey group, thirty miles from the coast of France and eighty miles from England, but belonging to England. You get on a boat at Weymouth, which is two hours in a train west of Southampton, which is an hour and a half in a train southwest of London, and sail in a channel steamer for exactly five hours. Early the next morning you come into St. Peter Port, the chief harbor of Guernsey. When you sail into that harbor early in the morning, or any other time, you positively gasp in delight and astonishment. Just as Sark Island is not an island, so St. Peter is not a port—for it, too, is a dream. Now I have seen many hundreds of "quaint, picturesque old world places," and I thought I was at last fully incited against raving about them. But believe me, St. Peter Port is different. There is only one thing that prevents me from launching into a long, violent rave, and that is that I started out to write about Sark.

As I write I'm sitting on the deck of a steamer threading a slow passage through the hundreds of rocks and islands on the way back to England. The sky is warm and blue, but it's not the sky that matters. It's the water. The water is a pure jade green. If you never read this you'll know (as we say in Ireland) that the call of that warm jade water proved too much for me, and I jumped into it, and turned into a fish, and am spending the rest of my days swimming amongst the loveliest islands in the world.

It was early on a Sunday morning that I chartered a little motor launch from a Frenchman with far-gazing eyes (yes, these islands have been British for the last 700 years, but the people still speak a kind of French), and asked him to take me out into the harbor and toward Sark.

"It's no good going to Sark today," he commented; and when I asked why, he said: "The Dame of Sark never allows anyone to land on the island on Sunday."

Beauties of Guernsey

I WAS glad. This gave me a chance to spend a day in Guernsey and in this wonderful St. Peter Port. "Why won't she let people land on the island on Sundays?" I demanded.

"Name of a name!" exclaimed the islander impatiently. "Don't ask me! Why does she keep motor cars and motorcycles out of the island? Why does she rule like a queen over the island? Don't ask me why the Dame of Sark does this, or why the Dame of Sark does that!"

So I had to go and see for myself. The island is about twelve miles from Guernsey, and from the distance it looks the same as all these channel islands look—great high rugged rocks rising straight out of the jade sea. And on getting closer you find—as with all the other islands here—that the shores are indeed high and rocky cliffs of solid granite, cut with deep caves, but that all the rest of the place is covered with a luxuriant and vividly colorful vegetation—pines and fig trees, elms and beeches and palm trees, and hundreds of varieties of flowers blazing with color and growing in profusion everywhere, and hundreds of rock walls and stone cottages with these flowers growing out of every nook and cranny, and out of the thatched or tiled roofs of the cottages.

When we sailed into the harbor of Sark—which is not so much a harbor as an exquisite, languorous blue lagoon with a landing pier in it—I got into a horse-drawn caleche such as the ones you see in Quebec, and drove up the steep winding road, which is completely overhung with great trees, and literally intoxicating with the perfumes of millions of flowers that cover the ground in carpets of solid color.

At once I questioned my driver. He was a little, bronzed man who spoke English almost as well as French, and whose name was Carteret. "Are all these things true I hear about this island?" I asked.

"Anything could be true about this island," he reflected, leading his horse up the steep hill. "Precisely what things do you refer to?" He stopped and gathered some roses and rhododendrons, as if my reply, whatever it might be, could not conceivably be of any importance to him or to anybody.

"Tell me about the Dame of Sark and her husband," I replied. "Tell me about your strange little parliament. Is it true that you all have to do two days work a year, and pay your ruler one sheep out of every ten, and all that?"

By Virtue of Charter

GRADUALLY, I learned bits and pieces of information about this amazing island. The ruler of it is Dame Hathaway of Sark, who before her marriage to Robert Woodward Hathaway, an American flying officer much younger than herself, was Mrs. Dudley Beaumont. By virtue of a charter granted to this woman's ancestors by Queen Elizabeth almost 400 years ago, she is the autocrat of the island, ruling it with feudal powers. She lives in a castle called the Seigneurie, and has every power over the islanders except those of life and death. She makes all her own laws—and administers them, very severely, the peasants tell me. She can impose any taxation she wishes, deport anyone from the island without giving a reason, commandeer the use of all the horses and carts in the island to work on her own magnificent estate—she is, in short, a feudal baroness holding and imposing all the rights of a noble of the middle ages.

When I heard all this I told the driver to take me at once to the Seigneurie. "Is the Dame here now?" I asked. "Ba ouay," said the driver, that being Norman French for "malls out"—the French-Canadians say it the same way. "She has just returned from London, where she took her daughter to be presented at court, while we poor devils struggle here to earn her fortune."

These "poor devils," incidentally, are remarkably happy and prosperous. In the first place, no one could help being happy in a paradise like Sark; and in the second, everybody has a good living, in spite of the alleged tyrannies of Dame Hathaway.

We drove down winding honeysuckle lanes toward the Seigneurie, passing on the way the parliament buildings of Sark. This parliament is an ancient stone cottage, and near it is the island jail, with a round roof. The Seigneurie is one of the most beautiful old castles I ever saw, surrounded with acres of unforgettable gardens. As I entered the grounds, an old man with keys hanging from his belt came by.

"He's one of the seneschals," said my driver. "The keepers of the keys." Seneschals! I thought the last seneschals had lived at the court of King Arthur! "What do they do?" I asked. "They serve as ushers during meetings of the parliament," said my man. Then I went in and met the Dame of Sark, the last feudal ruler in the British Empire. Dame Margaret Hathaway, I walked with her through some of her incomparable rock gardens, amidst fig and palm and all kinds of fruit trees. I asked her what it felt like to rule with despotic powers over an island of her own.

"It has its advantages," she laughed. "For example, I collect a shilling poll tax from every stranger who lands on the island. I'm saving up all these shillings to build a better harbor, which will cost about £20,000. It is also something of a privilege to be able to make the liquor laws myself. I allow drinks to be sold between 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. without any restrictions. Our taxes are low, and liquor is cheap. You can buy a bottle of Scotch whisky for eight shillings."

Has Own Parliament

"Do you govern the island directly, or through some sort of council?" I asked. "We have our own parliament," replied the Dame of Sark. "It has forty members, each one being the head of one of the land-owning families. These men are known as 'seigneurs.' In addition, there are twelve deputies who work regularly at government."

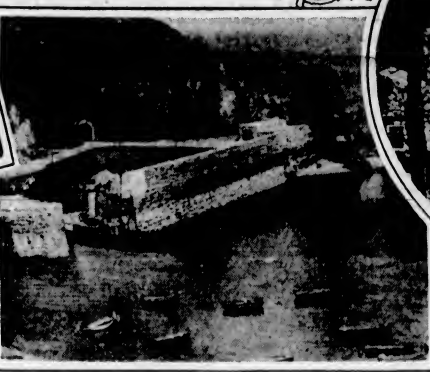

There are many feudal customs still in use, she said. "Every man on the island has to contribute two days' work a year without pay, or else supply a substitute. Anyone owning a horse and cart must also lend them two days a year for the public work. My people are very happy and prosperous. There is no poverty and unemployment here."

A little later I went driving round again with Carteret. The island, someone told me, is still used as a base for smugglers running valuable perfumes, liquors and silks into England, and I actually climbed into one of the great caves in the side of the cliffs where they still store their goods on occasion when they are waiting for favorable winds to carry their light sailing vessels to some obscure cove on the coast of England. Perfumes, liquors and silks—you can buy them at wonderful bargains in the Channel Islands, for there is little duty on them coming in from France. But try to take them to England! You are allowed to take half a pint of liquor and a few drops of perfume free of cost.

Friend Carteret agreed that the islanders were happy, but he wasn't sure they were so prosperous. I had lunch with him and his wife, and walked with him over his four acres of land. "Four acres!" he ejaculated savagely. "And out of the little while I raise on it, I have to contribute nineteen cabots to Dame Hathaway. A pretty mess!"

"How much is a cabot?" I demanded. "Thirty pounds," he said. "Last year I had only seven cabots left after giving nineteen to the Dame. I also have to contribute one out of every ten bundles of oats. Name of a name!"

It was hardly worth the trouble of living, he said. At the moment I would have changed places with him gladly. He lives in a little cottage hundreds of years old set in a little valley above a sapphire lagoon. He lives in the midst of honeysuckle, roses, bluebells, scarlet pimpernel and hawthorne. La Seigneurie is the name of his place, and for lunch in the garden in front his wife gave me ham and vegetables, warm rolls with rich butter, peaches and cream, a tankard of red wine, honey and grapes. Mon Dieu, if that is poverty, give me poverty. In the afternoon I swam in the warm waters of the lagoon, lay naked in the sunshine, and watched the little fishing smacks with yellow sails, and the great liners passing on their way to Cherbourg.

The island of Sark has a jail, left, for emergency—but not for much else, for Sark is so well governed that there is no discontent, and when there is no discontent there is no need for jails. Above, the artificial harbor which Dame Hathaway has built as a landing place.

Dame Hathaway, in circle, top, feudal ruler of the Island of Sark. Centre, one of the picturesque roads which encircle this "throwback to past civilization." Note the horse and rig, for the Dame of Sark allows no motor cars or cycles in her island kingdom. Below, Dame Hathaway's residence on the island, known as "the Seigneurie."

Houses Have Witches' Stones

I PAID a visit to the parliament, and found the deputies trying a fisherman for having killed a sea gull. He protested volubly that he had to kill that sea gull, because it was bringing him bad luck, but nevertheless, he was fined three pounds.

"Three pounds for killing a sea gull!" I exclaimed. "Oh yes," I was told. "The gulls are very useful, they warn the fishermen off the rocks in foggy weather."

I came to a church centuries old, full of the gravestones of Sarkian ancestors. There was an old peasant leaning against the stone wall. I didn't see any new graves, and I said to him: "People don't seem to die very often these days."

He eyed me gloomily, wondering if my remark was worth a reply. "No," he said at last, "only once."

A few minutes later I said: "Have you lived on the island all your life?" "Not yet," he retorted, and walked away.

After this experience of Sarkian humor, I got into my caleche again and drove away to visit a witch. Witchcraft and black magic die hard on these islands. On the side wall of most of the older houses you can see a flat stone protruding. These are known as "witches' stones" and were built into the walls as little tables on which to lay food for any witch who demanded it. No one would dream of refusing the demand of the witches for food and wine, for fear of bringing down on themselves some terrible curse. There are people living today—not peasants either—whose lives have been horribly ruined by witches' curses, or rather, by their belief in the power of the witches' curse. I met one old woman with a supernatural reputation, and asked her if she really believed she could put a curse on a man.

The old woman glared at me, and mumbled something in the French patois of the islands. Then she picked two or three little blue flowers and rubbed them in her hands and threw them at me, shouting something.

Two other people who witnessed this little scene were not nearly as amused as I. They shook their heads gravely, and one of them, a woman, said: "It is a serious thing to be cursed by a witch. And old Adele has cursed you."

"What did old Adele say?" I asked. "She said that all your children will be born dead."

"Does she often utter such dreadful curses on such slight provocation?" "She curses anyone who laughs at her or appears to make light of her. And there are many people who believe everything she says. As for me, I don't know; but it's only a week since she cursed a woman neighbor of mine, and the very next day the woman cut her hand and spilled a whole pail of cream."

So you see, you can never tell what's going to happen after a witch has thrown a spell over you. Why, only two weeks come the first Sunday after Epiphany . . . and so on. The channel islanders will talk witchcraft to you forever if you want to stop and listen.

I went back to Driver Carteret to ask a few final questions about the feudal system under which he groaned. We sat there a while on the rocks, looking out to sea, and then there came a moment I shall never forget. "Excuse me," he said hesitatingly, "but I don't know my English history very well, and there's something I'd like to know more about. Dame Hathaway, now, know you what she is doing? She is reviving old taxes and usages that weigh down hard on the peasant, and something ought to be done about it."

"Doubtless," I agreed, "but what has all this to do with the bad knowledge you have of English history?"

"Eh bien," he said boldly, after a further period of hesitation, "tell me about the Peasants' Revolt."

I was still chuckling at the thought of the rebellion smoldering in the breast of one of Dame Hathaway's subjects when I went aboard a little steamer which was getting up power in the jade lagoon called a harbor, which is the entrance to the curious island of Sark.

Becomes Quietest City

SO successful is the new effort to abate the noise nuisance that since the middle of August, Budapest has become the quietest "million-inhabitant" city in Europe. The summing-up and filing of offenders has been of much practical use; car owners have adopted a new and modest staccato hoot, motor-cyclists have invested in double silencers, and the only incorrigibles are the carters who still "hoo-oh" their teams through the streets.

Forty per cent of the ordinary noises of the roads have been proved to be entirely superfluous and their abatement is miraculous.

TAKING DOWN THE MIGHTY

By
PETER B. KYNE

WHEN Comet arrived in this vale of tears, and the owner of Sycamore Stock Farm at Pleasanton, California, discovered the foal was a colt, he rejoiced exceedingly. The new arrival's dam was Giddy Girl, winner of half a dozen big stakes. So John Stanhope, having infinite faith in the Mendelian law, looked hopefully forward to considerable pleasure and profit when Comet should start racing.

Unfortunately, Comet never remotely lived up to his name; for comets travel at terrific speed, and the royally-bred colt, as a two-year-old, could not step fast enough to beat the sorriest plater that had ever got into the money. The trainer reported that although Comet was undoubtedly a monumental failure as a two-year-old, he might develop into a very useful three-year-old. However, the trainer didn't really believe this; the wish was merely father to the thought. He liked Comet because the colt was rather lovable as horses go; hence he made his half-hearted plea to his employer.

The latter shook his head. "He's too expensive a luxury to maintain on a race track, so ship him back to the farm," he ordered. Back at Sycamore Stock Farm, Comet was turned loose in a twenty-acre paddock. For two weeks the despoiled failure received no sympathy from anyone. He received no grain; his ration was grass and hay, and he was a lonely and neglected horse until, on a morning late in April, a little chestnut filly named Wistful Winnie came up to the paddock fence and nickered to him. Wistful Winnie was a two-year-old of impeccable breeding, but had not been put into training as a yearling owing to an injury to her shoulder sustained in a collision with a gatepost. Wistful Winnie, though crippled, flirted with Comet over the fence. So Comet, doubtless realizing that faint heart never yet won fair lady, trotted off into his paddock about a hundred yards, off into his paddock about a hundred yards, turned and ran for that five-foot-and-a-half fence. He cleared it magnificently, and the farm manager saw him do it.

"A jumping-jack!" he declared enthusiastically. "He's only half out of training, so I'll put him back and school him over the high hurdles."

So Comet became a jumper, and a good one. When he was a three-year-old, he was a grand heavy hunter prospect, for he stood sixteen hands two and weighed twelve hundred pounds; he had perfect manners, a perfect mouth and perfect conformation; so a fox-hunting gentleman from Virginia bought him for fifteen hundred dollars. In quest of romance Comet had jumped a high fence—with two results: first, reinstatement to his ancient privileges; and second, a weedy, crooked-legged chestnut son about as big as a police dog.

Stanhope was the first to suspect Wistful Winnie. Said he to his foreman one morning in December: "I believe that little crippled filly is in foal."

The manager examined her and concurred in his employer's opinion. "Comet's the sire," he confessed.

"Well, we'll not bother with any of Comet's get," Stanhope decided.

WHAT do you intend to do with Wistful Winnie, Mr. Stanhope? "I don't know. Despite her permanently crippled condition, she might make a grand brood-mare; but it's always been my rule never to breed to any mare that hasn't had a splendid record on the track. If you get an offer for Winnie, sell her."

"Well, here comes old Dad Carrigan and his daughter Geraldine," the manager replied, and indicated an old man and a young girl walking out across the field to them. "Dad Carrigan's a race track sentimental. He's always maintained a string of cripples; he'll breed to anything of the blood royal, regardless of a history of non-speed; he falls in love with every horse he buys, and he's always broke—though I did hear his daughter made a horrible killing on a horse the old man gave her because he regarded the brute as worthless. The girl took the horse up to Hamilton, Ontario, ran him on a turf track, broke a world's record and sold him to Lord Marbury for fifty thousand dollars."

"Smart girl, eh?"

"She knows all her father knows about horses, because he's taught her and she's an apt pupil. I do believe Dad Carrigan is the greatest living authority on pedigrees. The girl's about eighteen years old, and for four years she's been breaking Dad's yearlings and exercising them. The old man told me once he's rather had her breeze a colt for him than Johnny Mahien or George Ellis or any of the great jockeys of this generation."

"He's an old fool," Stanhope declared irritably. "Sell him Wistful Winnie in foal to Comet, and I'll give you half what you get for her."

Hand in hand, old Dad Carrigan and Geraldine approached. The foreman introduced them to Stanhope, and introductions over, went at once to the attack on the defenseless Dad.

"Well, what's on your mind today, Dad?"

Dad Carrigan stroked his white whiskers meditatively. "Well, Gerry and I been talkin' things over. Just at present we're horseless, so we sort o' concluded to visit your farm, Mr. Stanhope, an' look over your yearlin's in the hope that mebbe you'd have about four youngsters you'd be willin' to sell reasonable an' we'd be willin' to buy. I want 'em unbroken. Gerry likes to break our yearlin's herself."

"You are fortunate, Mr. Carrigan, to have such a capable and willing partner. One doesn't often find girls of Miss Geraldine's age and good looks—"

WHAT'S the breeding of that little crippled filly? Gerry interrupted. She had never cared for compliments.

"Bold Girl by Sweep, Miss Gerry."

"I see she's in foal. To what sire?"

"A two-year-old called Comet."

"Ah," murmured Gerry. "Comet was no good." She stepped up to Wistful Winnie, opened the filly's mouth and examined her teeth. "Only a baby," she declared, "and she'll be a matron when she's a three-year-old. Well, her foal will probably be no gift, but this filly should be worth while even if she is lame. What do you want for her?"

"A thousand dollars—cash," the manager

"I'll forgive you if you'll invite me over some day to knock that ball around," Gerry said brightly.

answered her suavely. "The foal, of course, will be thrown in for good measure."

"She's been bred too young, and as a result, delivering this foal may kill her or cripple her so badly she may never have another."

"Oh, let the young lady have her a little cheaper, Bill," Stanhope pleaded.

"Nine hundred, then," the manager decided magnanimously.

"Let's look at some two-year-old colts, Pop," Gerry suggested, thus closing the argument.

"Seven-fifty, and not a cent more. Take it or leave it, Miss Gerry!"

Gerry took a dollar coin out of her purse.

"Fifteen hundred or nothing," she challenged.

"Which do you choose? Heads or tails?"

Stanhope and his man exchanged glances.

"Well, be a man or a mouse," the former urged. "If you let this little girl outgame you, I'll cut your salary."

"Tails," said the manager.

Gerry spun the coin, and it dropped in the grass. Stanhope bent over it. "Heads. You win, Miss Gerry. Take your filly."

"Thank you, Mr. Stanhope. Dad and I have just bought a farm about a mile from here. We're going to have about a dozen brood-mares, but they're going to be good ones, and they've got to be cheap. Good start, eh, Pop?"

Dad Carrigan beamed fondly upon his girl.

"Show us some long yearlings you have in training, Mr. Stanhope," Gerry pleaded. "And let me ride them."

Out in front of the stables Gerry saw a level field of about twenty acres. Backward and forward over this field a young man raced a polo pony and knocked a polo ball about.

"Who is that?" Gerry inquired of John Stanhope.

"That is my son Johnny, Miss Gerry. He has been at the farm the past three months breaking polo ponies. I give him all the slow race horses that are polo-pony size. Johnny's a five-goal man," he added proudly.

"I don't know what a five-goal man is, but he certainly can ride a horse. I think I'd like that game."

"One game at a time, Miss Gerry. Johnny is mad about polo, but only mildly interested in racing."

Just then Johnny Stanhope struck the ball, lifted it over the low fence and straight into the geometric centre of Gerry's lovely person. Five seconds later young Stanhope was off his horse and apologizing profusely.

"Oh, I'll forgive you if you'll invite me over some day to help you knock that ball around," Gerry said brightly. "I'm not hurt, thank you."

"I should be delighted," Johnny Stanhope assured her. "Suppose you come over tomorrow at ten. We'll work the ponies two hours, and you stay to luncheon."

"I think you're a perfectly grand person," Gerry declared. John Stanhope looked at his son, and old Dad Carrigan looked at his daughter, as the two young people gazed into each other's eyes.

"Well, son," said John Stanhope, "get along with your polo practice. We're going to take some yearlings down to the track and work them out."

JOHNNY shrugged, bowed to Gerry and Dad and went back to his polo pony. Gerry gazed after him as he raced down the field driving the ball before him; presently, with a small sigh that had in it an element of rebellious sacrifice, she half turned and discovered his father looking at her with something of the impersonal yet calculating glance he would have bestowed upon another man's horse. "He doesn't like the idea of me knowing his son," she thought. Aloud she said: "Well, to business."

As Dad Carrigan and Gerry walked home to their recently acquired farm, the old man said: "Sweetheart, I think you'd better find an excuse to cancel your acceptance of young Stanhope's invitation."

"I think so, too, darling; but after all the trouble I'm out, fishing for it—"

"Even so, Gerry. We're poor people—"

"Social nobodies. Yes, I understand. And the Stanhopes are worth millions and millions. I think Johnny's father is a disagreeable snob. I wouldn't buy his yearlings on a bet. He asked double what they are worth. We can go to Kentucky and get crackerjacks for fifteen hundred dollars—colts as well bred as any Mr. Stanhope, with all his millions, ever owned. But I think Johnny's a dear, don't you?"

"Well, he acts like real folks, Gerry. But he understands his father. The old man gave him a straight hint to get along with his polo-ball stuff, and the boy took it. So I think you had better have a headache tomorrow and phone him. Might save a headache later on."

Gerry twined her warm fingers in his and squeezed them hard. "If he wants to see me again, he'll call on me. You're right, Dad. I'll bet you a new hat, Pop, that Wistful Winnie gives us a colt."

"You're on. A new hat she'll drop a filly."

He was grateful for her for having thus adroitly changed the topic of conversation.

Two days later Johnny Stanhope drove over, and finding Gerry in the garden, assumed she had entirely recovered from her headache. So he invited himself in and stayed all afternoon. When Johnny at length reluctantly departed, she did not invite him to return.

Said he: "Well, I suppose I shan't see you again." Thereby subtly she issued a challenge, which he accepted the following day.

He called about 10 a.m. and stayed to luncheon; incidentally Gerry ascertained that his father had gone to New York, to be gone a month; consequently it was no surprise to her to see Johnny Stanhope every day during that month. The day he failed to call, she knew his father had returned.

JOHNNY remained away three days, then one evening Dad came home and found Gerry in tears. "Scold or burn yourself cookin' supper, honey!" he queried.

She shook her head dolorously. "I've just said good-bye to Johnny."

"Oh, so that's all it is."

"It's enough, Pop. Johnny told me he loved me. He said he couldn't ask me to marry him, though, until he could get a job and be independent of his father. His—father—objects."

"Why, we always knew that. We're not in the Stanhope class, Gerry."

"Well, Johnny and I are not engaged, but—there's a sort of understanding. Perhaps some day—"

Johnny talked with his father first and was told that if he insisted on marrying her, he must be prepared to earn his own living the remainder of his life. And poor Johnny doesn't know how to earn a living.

"Is he going to try to learn?"

"Yes."

"That's mean a break with his father."

"I suppose so. I—I'm not—good enough—for the Stanhopes."

Dad decided to terminate the distressing confession. "Well, this is one race you've got to run on your own courage, lass. So you told Johnny not to quarrel with his father? Yes, of course. The right thing to do. Old Stanhope isn't the only father with a bit o' pride—and the situation is none of your making."

"But I love Johnny!" Gerry wailed.

"Don't blame you. He's a grand lad. However, if he's worth your love, he'll prove it. If he doesn't prove it, you'll be in luck. Don't cry, pet. Let's have supper and go to the movies."

Gerry got up, laid her wet cheek against his and clung there about five minutes; then, with a toss of her head and a twisted smile, she set about preparing the evening meal.

In the morning Stanhope, Sr., motored over and stated bluntly that he wished to discuss the matter of the attachment that appeared to have been formed between Gerry and Johnny during his absence.

"Talk it over with Gerry," old Dad answered Stanhope shortly. "It's her business, and she's capable of handling it herself."

Stanhope stepped inside the little house and sat down. "Miss Gerry," he asked, "is it your intention to marry my son in opposition to my desires?"

"Not until I discover that absence really makes the heart grow fonder, Mr. Stanhope, and not until Johnny can show me he is in a position to support a wife."

"It will be a long time before that happens. I assure you; and in the interim he will receive no financial aid from me."

"And of course, if he marries me, you will

"Exactly."

"Well, I'm not a gold-digger, and I'm glad to learn that Johnny isn't one either."

"What will you take to give him up? You and your father can use some ready money, and I know that if you pass your word to drop my son out of your life, you'll play fair."

"I have a price, but you could never afford to pay it," Gerry replied evenly. "Did you happen to notice a pet bulldog asleep in the porch as you came in?"

"Yes."

"Well, if you're here thirty seconds from now, I'm going to tell that that dog to work you over."

JOHN Stanhope, flushed, angry and humiliated, departed instantly. Johnny succeeded in finding a position rather more readily than he had anticipated. Because he was well and favorably known to a great many rich people, a San Francisco bondhouse decided to attempt to make a bond salesman of him. They even gave him a liberal drawing account while he was studying the business for three months; then they sent him forth into the world of finance, and the first month Johnny earned twenty-two hundred dollars in commissions.

MEANWHILE, the despised Wistful Winnie had given birth to a colt foal, though when Gerry first looked at it, she had a feeling that a giant jack-rabbit had by some means managed to invade the maternity box during the night. He was a chestnut with a blaze face and four white stockings.

"I didn't expect much of a foal, of course," Gerry told her father, "but at the same time I expected no such half-potion as this."

"Never build high hopes on a foal from an immature sire and dam, honey. And small as he is, the filly hasn't enough milk to keep him alive," he announced.

"I saw a big grade Norman mare with a foal in a field up the valley a few days ago," Gerry dissented. "Let buy her and give her to this morsel for a foster mother."

"I love him already—he's so awful, Pop. And I have a name for him. I'm going to call him Wee Drop and register him—if he lives."

WHEN the foal was about six weeks old Gerry noticed that his legs were straightening. Cow hocks he would always have, but crooked legs he would in time outgrow.

At three months of age he was about as large as the average thoroughbred colt a month old, and Gerry began to feel very cheerful about him. When he was six months old, his legs were perfectly normal and he was growing rapidly. As a yearling he gave promise of being almost fourteen hands high at maturity, and Gerry ceased worrying about him. By October Wee Drop was healthy and voracious: With his winter coat well started he looked a bit of a vagabond.

"I've never seen a colt with more vitality than that little handful," the hired man reported.

Gerry looked at Wee Drop's cow hocks. "I wonder if he'll ever have any speed?" she mused aloud.

"He's a streak of lightning," Miss Gerry.

"I think I'll train him," the girl decided; so next day Wee Drop was clipped, and at the end of a long cavesson trotted and cantered around in circles for half a hour. A week of this, and Gerry broke him, though his breaking was a mere formality.

IN February, after breezing an eighth half a dozen times, the girl let him all out one morning. He stepped the eighth in eleven flat. A week later he worked three-eighths in thirty-five; by the middle of March he had done it in thirty-three and two-fifths, and Gerry knew then she had a real race horse. Two days later he ran the half in forty-seven without the slightest mistake.

"Pop," said Gerry, "I'll Wee Drop can get six furlongs, he'll make us a fortune."

"Well," Dad declared, "he's bred for distance, and I expect him to perform."

"Well, he can do four and a half furlongs, and that's the Futurity course at Agua Caliente," Gerry mused. "And the purse is ten thousand dollars added. That race is worth not less than ten thousand to the winner, Pop. I'm going to ship."

Four days later Wee Drop won the Futurity and broke a track record. The winner's end of the purse was slightly in excess of ten thousand, and Gerry cashed on him. She won two more bets of a thousand each on him at even money before the meeting closed; at Tanforan Park he won a five-thousand-dollar added stake for California-bred two-year-olds at six furlongs, and Gerry cashed a five-thousand-dollar bet at six to one.

IN the Fall of the year the Carrigans returned to their California farm, Wee Drop had his plates removed and was given a month's rest in a green pasture. When he was on edge the following Spring Gerry took him over to Tanforan Park a month before other horses began to arrive for the Spring meeting, and set him down for a mile in company with one of her father's good three-year-olds. Wee Drop negotiated the course with as much ease and speed as he had been wont to run six furlongs as a two-year-old. "I wonder," Gerry said to her father, "if Wee Drop can get a mile and a quarter?"

"Put ninety pounds on him and try," Dad suggested.

A week later, when no clockers or other racing men were present to snap their watches on him, he ran a mile and a quarter in two four and four-fifths. He was blowing a little at the finish but was not greatly distressed. Gerry was delighted. "If he does that on this track, which is far from fast, he should fairly fly at Agua Caliente, which is a very fast track," she told Dad. "However, the Agua Caliente Handicap is a closed stake. I never dreamed he might be eligible. But the American Derby and the Classic at Chicago are still open and I'm going to enter him."

So she sent in her entry and check for the nomination fee and promptly flew to Chicago to wangle a bet out of the Winter book there.

Wee Drop won, ridden to his last gasp.

BACK at their little California stock farm Gerry Carrigan, having prepared "Thanksgiving dinner, was awaiting the return of her father from the adjoining town, whither he had gone for the mail. When at length he arrived she saw that he was the bearer of news of more than ordinary interest.

"It says here in the paper," he announced, "that John Stanhope has gone into the hands of a receiver. The crash in the stock market knocked him over. He'd borrowed a lot of money, using his high-priced stocks for collateral; then the market went to glory and the banks and his brokers called on him for more collateral to sweeten what they had and which wasn't worth so much any more. He couldn't make good in the long run, because things kept gettin' worse, and they were about to petition him into bankruptcy. To avoid that a receiver appointed for his affairs, on account he owes money in several states. Maybe he'll work money, but whether he does or not he's busted now."

Suddenly old Dad commenced to chuckle. "Well, the proud old rooster's in our class now, Gerry."

"No, he isn't," the girl retorted. "He's far below our class. When I won, in purses and bets this Summer in Chicago, nearly half a million dollars, I wrote Johnny Stanhope asking his advice on investments. He advised me to sell some important stocks short because everybody else was buying them long."

Gerry poked a fork into the turkey and basted it for a few minutes. "So I spread $250,000 among five big brokers in Chicago and told them to see me some shorts. Well, do you know, darling, the market kept going up, and they kept calling for more margin, until they had me broke? That's why I had to sell poor old broken down Wee Drop for $25,000. I needed more margin. Why, those brokers had me going crazy. I couldn't understand it, but they told me that if I didn't give them more margin I'd lose everything. Then just as I was about to lose everything, prices began to tumble, and I bought enough stocks at perfectly ridiculous prices, to cover my shorts—and made nearly three million dollars. Then I wired Johnny for a list of good sound bonds that were cheap and safe. Johnny's awfully wise about bonds and he's very conservative. When I received his list I bought bonds—"

"You gave Johnny your order, then?"

"I did not. Why should I permit Johnny to know my business?"

"But Johnny's selling bonds for a living and a three-million-dollar order would have meant a lot to the boy."

"Yes, poor dear! I cried when I realized I had to deny him the business." She closed the oven door. "I wonder what Johnny looks like now that he's three years older than when I saw him last. I wonder if he's changed. Strange pride about Johnny. He swore he'd never see me until he could come to me with enough money, earned by himself, to provide me with as good a living as you ever had given me."

"Well, he must have dug up the money, because I met him over at the cross-roads ten minutes ago. He was going to visit his father, but he said he'd be over here to help us eat Thanksgiving dinner. An' I never invited him."

Gerry turned down the gas in the oven. "He may be late for dinner," she said softly, "and I don't want the turkey to be overdone."

SHE went into the dining-room and set two more places at the table. And as she came out Johnny Stanhope came in. Three years of battle for his own bread and butter had left their imprint on him, but he was still the old smiling Johnny.

"Gerry," he announced, "I've made $50,000 in the recent financial free-for-all, and I've been admitted to a junior partnership in the firm by which I am employed. Will you marry me?"

Gerry favored her father with a swift triumphant glance. "Hum-m! Method in your madness, I see," he murmured.

"He never was a gold-digger and neither was

I. Dad Carrigan," she cried happily. "Johnny, of course I'll marry you. I adore you. You're too perfectly gorgeous. Quick sweetheart! I've been waiting three years for your kiss."

Dad Carrigan fled to his room.

WHEN Gerry summoned him some ten minutes later, Johnny was gone. "I sent him to fetch his father," she explained. "I've a notion the old idiot may be sufficiently human now to eat dinner with us."

"It never cost nobody nothin' to act courteous," Dad assured her.

"Sometimes it does," Gerry replied dreamily. "For instance, it's going to cost me perhaps $50,000 to be courteous to that darling Johnny. I'm going to buy back poor little broken down Wee Drop. It's just occurred to me what a perfectly gorgeous sire of polo ponies he'll make." She looked in the oven at the turkey. "Poor Johnny, how he adored polo—and his father took his ponies away from him! I'll have to buy them from the Stanhope receiver, of course, but they'll make Johnny so happy. Johnny was a five-goal man. I'll never be happy until he's a ten-goal man, at least."

Son of Richest Woman

Bought Steamer After

Kicking Over Traces

COLONEL Edward Howland Robinson Green was tied to a hundred million dollar apron-string for forty-eight years. When his mother died he kicked over the traces, purchased a fifty-eight-cent railway ticket and got married. He bought a Great Lakes passenger steamer, tore out the inside and rebuilt it as a private yacht. It had forty-eight staterooms, so he named each one after a state in the union and called the whole thing the United States. He and his wife spent their honeymoon on it.

When he was born, Hetty Green vowed she would make him the richest man in the world. When she died, at the age of eighty-one, she had failed to live up to her promise. But she had made a pretty good start. Her will divided a hundred million dollars between her son and her daughter.

Eddie Green had been in love with a girl in Highland Park, Illinois, for fifteen years, but he couldn't marry her because his mother wouldn't let him, so when she died and left him half of her hundred million he got married, bought the Great Lakes passenger steamer, tore out the inside and rebuilt it as a private yacht. It had forty-eight staterooms, so he named each one after a state in the union and called the whole thing the United States. He and his wife spent their honeymoon on it.

He built a forty-five-room nest for his bride on the old family farm in New Bedford, Massachusetts. The general layout was that of a Summer hotel, with a coxy, sixty-foot living-room and a garage for thirty automobiles.

Has Unique Mansion

COLONEL Green's mansion, which he calls Round Hill, is built on a flat, treeless stretch of land along the shore of Buzzard's Bay. On Round Hill itself, the only high ground nearby, the colonel has erected an airplane beacon and nine public address horns through which he broadcasts radio programmes for five miles around. There are also hot-dog stands, the houses of his servants, a windmill he moved from Rhode Island, an old whaling ship embedded in concrete, the radio transmitter masts of his private broadcasting station—"The Voice From Way Down East"; a huge conservatory, and a private airport with hangars for a blimp and half a dozen airplanes.

Into this estate, full of its toys and hobbies, so much like the playground of an eager little boy, there pours every week-end and holiday a stream of five thousand motor cars bearing fifteen thousand men, women and children.

He is a very big man—six feet four inches tall, once weighed two hundred and seventy-five pounds. Once an impeccable dresser, the colonel has become a bit careless of late. He doesn't care for sports clothes—refers to white flannel trousers as "ice cream pants"—and sticks to an ordinary sack suit without a vest, white pleated shirt, and a wing collar almost big enough to put on over his head. He may or may not be wearing a moustache, depending on his fancy.

Portrait in Wine Trade

Club at London Bears

Unique Testimonial

FEW cities can boast so many varieties of clubs as there are in London. Many of them are to be found outside the orthodox clubland of the West End, and not a few are situated among the offices and warehouses of the city.

Such a one is the Wine Trade Club, on the top floor of a five-storied building within a stone's throw of Tower Bridge. It is used by shippers and wholesale traders in wine and brandy, and has a museum of quaint old bottles and a library of rare books about wine, written in every European language.

One of the club's most prized possessions is a large portrait of Mr. Van Horn, who was famous in 1743. With it is a testimonial saying: "Mr. Van Horn, hambone merchant, belonged to a club called the Amiable Society, held at the Bull Inn, Blatopgate, for a period of twenty-two years. During this period he drank 25,000 bottles of wine, which makes 2,932 dozen and four bottles, averaging nearly four bottles and a half per day. And did not miss drinking the above quantity but two days, the one of which was the burial of his wife, and the other the marriage of his daughter, and lived till he was ninety years of age."

Professor—If the moon is two million miles away, how long will it take an airplane traveling at 100 miles an hour to reach it?

Many Photographic Gems Await Those With Enterprise; Mount Baker From New Angle

Mount Baker, in all its snowy majesty, rears its lofty head in pride toward the skies, enhancing the charm of Victoria's beautiful setting. The above picture is such a view that may be seen during the Summer months. Rare is the occasion, however, when this scenic treasure is so clear that a definite outline may be obtained on a photographic plate. By using an infra-red filter, a specially sensitized plate, and, of greatest importance, selecting an ideal spot from which to catch Mount Baker in all its pristine glory the above panorama of the lofty peak, with its fringe of foothills, and Victoria's skyline in the foreground was made possible. When one considers that Mount Baker is between eighty and ninety miles distance, the above photographic accomplishment can more readily be appreciated. Infra-red rays have a greater wave length than the visible colors rays, and consequently are able to pierce the humidity or fine particles of dust that fill the air with greater directness than ordinary color waves. Foliage undergoes a change in photographic reproduction when the red filter is used. This is due to the fact that vegetation throws off infra-red rays more than anything else. This accounts for green patches appearing white in the photograph instead of in a dark shade.

London Street Cries

By T. A. SIMMONS

ALAS, the day of the street cry is over, yes when the writer was a young fellow they were still quite numerous.

We perhaps might say that the street cry was the forerunner of modern advertising, it being the way that the trader of those days drew attention to his wares.

There were many street cries, some of them even expressed in verse. One of the earliest of the writer's recollections was the broom seller, usually a woman; presumably the male of the species used to manufacture the product, while his wife attended to the selling. They used to sing the following quite musically, and it ran something like this: "Buy a broom, my pretty lady. Come buy me a broom; a large one for the lady, and a small one for the baby. Come buy my pretty lady! Come, buy me a broom!"

Being born in the parish of Mitcham, then a little village—now practically a part of London and famous all over the world for the past hundred years for its lavender—I can recall the lavender sellers with their tuneful refrain. The seller was often a little boy or girl, and their cry, in its childish treble, lingers with me yet. It ran thus:

"Won't you buy my sweet lavender.
Sixteen blue branches for a penny.
You buy it once, you buy it twice.
It makes your clothes smell very nice."

The travelling tinker with his cry of: "Pots to mend. Kettles to mend. Knives to mend. Scissors to grind," trundled his antiquated machine, exactly like those seen sometimes in Victoria today, but the present-day tinker, I notice, rings a bell instead of calling out. No doubt there is some city ordinance that prevents our grinder crying his trade; in fact, this is probably why the London street cry has disappeared.

Street cries in London, I believe, are now forbidden, perhaps rightly, for we must admit that for every cry that was at all musical there were a dozen that were not.

Old Chairs to Mend
THE old chair mender, often blind, would cry: "Old chairs to mend." This particular cry is immortalized in the nursery rhyme:

"Old chairs to mend.
Old chairs to mend.
If I had as much money as I could spend,
I never would cry, 'Old chairs to mend.'"

There was also the flower seller with his "Fresh flowers of the mornin', all grownin' and ablowin'."

Other cries were: "Milk-O," "Sweep," and "Fine fresh watercreases" (particularly noting that they called them "watercreases," not watercreases); the raucous cry of the newswoman shouting the evening editions of The Evening News and The Star, or the now defunct Sun and Echo; or the hoarse-throated individual who, when a murder had been committed, hastened down to the particular locality with his bundles of evening papers and cried "Orrible murder," usually demanding a penny for a halfpenny paper, and getting it.

Many of the cries of these street traders were, to the uninitiated, so much gibberish, and yet quite understandable to their customers.

Some would draw attention by ringing a bell or beating a drum; a bell always being the sign of the mufin man, who piled his trade in the winter. He was always known as the "mufin man"—why, I do not know—as to the best of my knowledge he usually sold crumpets, carrying them upon his head on a tray carefully covered with a piece of green baize.

Other Queer Traders

LONDON has many queer street traders that are quite unknown in this country. The "cats' meat man," known as "pussy's butcher," with his little cart with "Purveyor of Cats' Meat" proudly painted on the side, cried, "Meat, meat!" calling upon his customers with the regularity of the milkman, the neat carefully put up on a small skewer and retailing for a halfpenny and penny per stick; the "salt and hearthstone man," the old, old man who sold you groundsel for your pet canary, and the mender of umbrellas—all these went their rounds day in and day out; many of them had done their rounds for thirty or forty years. The street trader fills a big niche in London life, and, in the aggregate, is responsible for a large turnover.

Take, for instance, the costermonger ("Arrie" and "Arriett"—the butt of so many jokes). Here is a hard-working citizen, out with his barrow and his mope from early morning until late at night. The word "costermonger" seems to be derived from the word "coster-donger." A "coster" was a large species of apple, and "donger" is apparently Teutonic (a leader), therefore, the original was a trader in apples, and to this day the true costermonger only trades in fruit, vegetables, and sometimes fish. The genuine coster works hard and plays hard. If you have ever been to Hampstead Heath, "The Welsh Harp," or, as "Arrie" calls it, "The Welsh 'Arp down 'Endon wye," or Epping Forest, on a London bank holiday, I think you will admit that he plays even harder than he works. Watch him and "Arriett" skipping and dancing for hours at a time, stopping occasionally to share a pot of frothing "arf and arf."

Apocryph of "half and half," the late Albert Chevalier—the immortal bard of the coster—in one of his songs called "Arrie Little Nipper," interspersed in his patter the following tale of this nipper:

"One day I goes into the King's 'Ed wiv' the Missus and the nipper, and I calls for two pots of 'arf and arf'. The nipper watches me for a moment and then says, 'Farver! Ain't Muvver going to have none?' To those who have had the pleasure of hearing Chevalier, I am sure that they will never forget his rendering of those coster songs, more particularly that pathetic song, "My Old Dutch." There was often not a dry eye in the house. He must have sung it some thousands of times, for the audiences would seldom let him leave the stage without singing this as an encore.

Purveyor to the Prince

ANOTHER street trader was the "hot baked potato man," with his familiar can. There is a good story told of the late King Edward when Prince of Wales. In company with a friend and an equerry he was returning to Marlboro House late one night when they passed a "baked potato man," and, presumably in the spirit of mischief, they bought some of his stock. They did not know it at the time, but the man recognized the Prince and next day he promptly appeared on his pitch with a board stuck up on his can: "Purveyor to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales."

The writer, in his young days, was living-in at a firm where he was employed, and as no heat was provided in his bedroom, it was his custom on bitterly cold night to buy a couple of large, hot "spuds," carefully wrap them up, and use them for his feet in lieu of the usual hot water bottle, and I may say that they acted admirably.

Roadside chequists were another delicacy that could be bought in the winter, while in the summer the familiar Italian vendor with his highly-decorated barrow sold "hokey-pokey" and ice cream at a halfpenny and penny per glass. Most of his customers were children, who, after spending the magnificent sum of one penny, always thought they were entitled to what they called a "taster"—another spoonful after they had carefully licked their glass clean.

Another picturesque street seller was the French onion seller, who, during the onion season, came over from St. Malo or Cherbourg with his produce. Upon landing at Southampton he would walk to London. The onions were plaited together in long strings and carried suspended on a long pole, similar to the manner in which the Chinese vegetable sellers in Victoria used to carry their wares.

There were quite a variety of street entertainers—the man with the barrel organ, the street purveyor of music, to be found in every part of London, often with a monkey on his instrument; the "Punch and Judy" show, delighting young and old; the performer on high stilts; the old Hungarian with his clever black bear; the public house singer often with a very good tenor voice; and, in earlier years, the German band.

Rolling Coffee Stall

ANOTHER popular street stall is the "coffee stall" (colloquially known as the "Gutter Hotel") and which was possibly the forerunner of the lurch counter of today. This merchant would arrive on his pitch about 9 o'clock at night, hauling his little "hut on wheels" with an elderly pony. The stall was spotlessly clean and brightly lit. With good plain food and hot tea, coffee and cocoa he did a thriving business. His customers were most cosmopolitan, ranging from the homeless wanderer to the young West End "swells" (known as "sons of the morning") in full evening kit, homeward-bound from some "spree" in the early hours of the morning. For the modest sum of fourpence (eight cents) one could obtain a couple of hard-boiled eggs, two thick slices of bread and butter, and a cup of coffee—not a bad meal, you must admit, for the price. London never really sleeps and you rarely passed a "gutter hotel" without seeing some customers at the counter.

Mention must also be made of the old "cabby" with his hansom, or four-wheeler, and the custom of whistling for your cab. I saw an amusing thing occur one day outside the National Sporting Club. The commissionaire, wishing to call a cab for a member, came to the door and blew his whistle, but omitted to notice that it was a police whistle, and inside a minute or two he had a dozen stalwart Bow Street "Bobbies" rushing up to the chub.

London is so vast that very few people really know it. I, for one, do not profess to. The late George R. Sims, I think, was one of the few people who really knew London, and he was an authority on the subject.

Unfortunately, the street cry has disappeared. Possibly there are many who would say, rightly too, but I think these old cries and customs are part of the British race, and am very sorry to see them relegated into the limbo of the past.

Famous Death Diamond Makes Its Appearance Again in England

By JOSEPH BARBER, JR.

WILL the famous sixty-four-carat Golconda diamond which has just been sold by Archduke Josef of Austria to a firm of English diamond agents, continue to bring the customary unhappiness, financial ruin and death, that has pursued every owner since it was first discovered in India?

The gem which for sixty years was the most famous and valuable in the Hapsburg collection is believed by many to have no small connection with the string of personal tragedies, assassinations, and exhausting wars, that have followed the Hapsburgs since they came into its possession.

The diamond's past history is fantastic beyond belief. It was first discovered by a native working in the diamond mines near Hyderabad, India. Not knowing how to get it out without being caught, for laborers were thoroughly searched at the end of each day's work, he revealed his find to one of the overseers, named Turner.

Turner promised to help, then attacked the native secretly, and murdered him, escaping with the diamond.

He was pursued—not for the diamond—but because he was suspected of being connected with the native's murder. Just before his capture he swallowed the gem to prevent its discovery—and two hours later expired.

Doctor Finds Gem

IT was thought he had been poisoned by some mysterious Indian means, and that was to be an end of the investigation until an English doctor decided to find out what sort of poison it was.

In his examination he, of course, found the cause of Turner's death. He managed to get out of India safely, and sold the stone in London to a rich playboy, who had it worked into a diadem for his mistress, a noted dancer.

On her way to Naples by ship, she disappeared, apparently overboard, for not a single trace of her was ever found.

Nothing was heard of the diamond for some years, until it turned up in the hands of a French adventurer, who offered it to an English lord. The latter, remembering the evil history of the stone, secretly informed the police.

After stealing up to the inn where the Frenchman was stopping, intending to arrest him, they found their man stabbed to death in his bed. The stone was nowhere to be found.

Through some means, yet unexplained, Dutch merchants came into its possession, and it lay for years in the vaults of an Amsterdam diamond firm, before the Hapsburgs bought it.

The Plain Countryman

A prince does sit a slippery seat,
And bears a careful mind:
The nobles, which in silk do eat,
Do little pleasure find.
Our safeguard and safety, with many great matters they scan;
And none lives merrier, in my mind,
Than doth the plain countryman.

The Magic Hole on Mt. Tzouhalem

By B. M. CRYER
(All Rights Reserved)

FOR many months Khul-Stae-Num had not been seen about our streets, and then I learned that, in all probability, the familiar old figure in his faded red sweater, with a basket of salmon on his arm, would not be seen here again—for poor old Khul-Stae-Num had gone blind.

"Him eye lost!" his wife explained. "Aah, too bad!"

As a young man Khul-Stae-Num was known up and down the coast as a mighty paddler and, as captain of the Kuper Island racing canoe, brought his crew home triumphant after many a race. Hence his title of "Captain" Mo-Yee.

During the Summer I saw him taking part in one of the Indian dances at the Sweet Pea Festival at Duncan. As he was led forward by his chief, Edward Hulbertson, and stood leaning on a heavy walking stick, his fine old head turning this way and that as he sang the medicine man's song in a voice that was wonderfully true and strong, one wondered how many amongst those watching him realized that the plucky old fellow could see none of the swaying, shuffling figures about him and had no idea of the crowd of interested onlookers. It was not until his song was ended, the last dancer had disappeared into the tent, and Khul-Stae-Num was left alone, hesitating, while his chief came to lead him off, did one realize that he was totally blind.

I saw him again a few weeks ago at Porlier Pass (Cowichan Gap), where he spends the greater part of the year, occasionally moving to "Tausie," the reserve at Bonasall's Creek, and it was while at the pass that I heard the story of how, not so long ago, Khul-Stae-Num woke early one morning to find his old wife very ill.

Goes for Assistance

BLIND as he was, there was nothing that he could do to ease her pain. He must go for help.

Surely a Divine Providence watched over that brave old Indian as he felt his way over the rocks to where his canoe was kept, pushed it into the water, and set off to seek help at the gas station situated in Anchor Bay, half way through the pass.

How he guided his canoe through the treacherous tide rips and currents—for the tide was running strongly at that time—and how he avoided the kept beds and knew at what moment to turn into Anchor Bay, will never be known; but the occupants of the station were roused by loud shouts and sounds of hammering, and hurrying out found Khul-Stae-Num sitting in his canoe shouting lustily and banging upon the wharf with his paddle.

I found him sitting out on the rocks in front of his house, an old hat pushed to the back of his head and his face turned to the wind blowing in from Tricomattee Channel. "It's good," he said, as I seated myself beside him. "This wind makes me feel good. You know," he added, "my eyes are gone, but I see all the things in here." He tapped his forehead.

"Before you came," he said, "I heard a funny noise, and it made me think a lot about people. We don't like them; we never talk about them. They used to eat the dead. Now—" he paused awhile to allow this awful information to sink in, then—"do you know what a man had to do before he could fly—before the Spirit came to him? Well, now, first he would eat and eat until he could not move, and after that he would sleep. For four months he would sleep, and at the end of every month he would turn over. The first month he would sleep on one side, next month on his back, then on his other side, and the last month on his front. After that he would make up so hungry, and he would hurry away and find some dead man and eat and eat. After that he would go back into the mountains and wash, and wait for the Spirit to come to him.

"Our people never did that," he told me. "Only those North people could fly; the Cowichans never ate their dead."

"Sometimes a Cowichan would marry a woman from the North people; then sometimes their boys would fly—a little, but the Cowichans got ropes of skin and tied them to poles, so that they could only fly round and round and not get away.

"See now!" he suddenly exclaimed, "I don't like to talk about those Who-Tup. You want a story, eh? Well, wait, I must remember."

He pulled his hat well over his eyes and sat very still, remembering. Then he put his hand on my arm.

"Listen!" He spoke in a whisper. "I will tell you of something that no white man knows about. Even our young people do not know of this." He leaned towards me, and I felt that he was trying—oh, so hard—to see my face. "You think that will be a good story?" he asked anxiously.

"Khul-Stae-Num," I told him solemnly, "I think it will be my best story."

Tzouhalem the Wicked

"AHAH!" His face broke into smiles. "Now listen. You have seen that mountain near Duncan that the white people have called Tzouhalem? Why do they call it that name?" he demanded. "That Tzouhalem was a bad man. No good Indians would have him at their houses. He was bad. He stole our women—once he had thirty of our women at his house—and he stole all that we had. He fought the white men and he fought the good Indians. He was bad, and so—" He paused dramatically—"so," he continued, striking the rocks with his stick, "the white men gave his name to that good land."

"Never mind, Khul-Stae-Num," I interrupted. "I want to hear that story of yours."

Instantly he laughed. "Ah!" he said. "I forgot. When I hear the name Tzouhalem it always makes me mad."

"Well, now, long ago, when my father was a young man, all that land at Comlaken was big trees, only Indians living there. Well, there was a little trail going through the trees, just big enough for one man to walk. That trail went from the Indian village through the trees up and up the mountain, until it came to where the rocks go straight up, and there it stopped. Now,—his voice sank to a whisper—"do you know what was in the rock where the trail stopped? There was a little hole."

Again there was a dramatic pause. "That hole," he continued, "was very, very wonderful. It was a place where the young braves went to see if they would be lucky, to try their luck and to find out what would be best for them to do."

"No man would go alone to that place. Many would go together and try their luck. Now, this is how they would do it."

"There was only room for one man's hand in the little hole, so one at a time the braves put their hands in, as far back as their arms would go."

Their Fortunes Told

"THE first man would put his hand in and feel about, pick up something and shut his hand tight. Then he would take it out and all the others would come up close to see what had been put in his hand, and all would try and guess what they would see when the man opened his fingers.

"Sometimes there would be a handful of white goat hair. That was very good luck, for that meant the man would have good luck hunting the mountain goat. Sometimes he would find a handful of fish scales when he locked his hand, then that man knew he would be a good fisherman. One day Tzouhalem went to try his luck. He put in his hand and brought out a handful of long, black hair. That is why he was such a great fighter, killing people and taking lots of heads with the long hair hanging down."

"Lots of different things they found in that hole, but the best of all was to find a piece of the skin of the mountain goat. The man who put in his hand and found that would be very rich, have lots of blankets and skins and be able to give good times with lots of presents—a great Tye."

"Who put all those things in that hole?" I asked him.

"No one put them in," was the indignant reply. "They just came there when the man put his hand in. It was just as though there was someone inside that stone who saw the hands coming in, and put a different thing in each hand."

Khul-Stae-Num looked at me and nodded his head slowly. It was difficult to believe that he was blind. "That is all the story I can remember today," he said. "Soon I go to Tausie to live. It is a better place for me now that I have no eyes. You come and see me there one day, and I will have another story for you, maybe a better one than the one I have told you today."

We were interrupted by a shout, and climbing across the rocks came Cyth-Layta. What age Cyth-Layta may be I have no idea, but he is a good many years older than Khul-Stae-Num.

"What you doing?" he asked after we had shaken hands. "Aha! telling stories. Well, I can tell you good stories too—old, old stories." He sat down beside his friend and looked steadily at me for some time.

Worked for Governor Douglas

"NOW," he said, "did anyone ever tell you how I worked for that fine man Jim Douglas? He was Governor Douglas, and I was a little boy, maybe ten years old. Well, one day I was going along past a nice house, and a man came out of the house and began driving some chickens out of the garden. I went in and helped him drive them away and he patted my head and said 'I was a good boy. Well, he said to me, 'How would you like to work for me keeping those chickens out of my garden? You come every day and I will pay you two dollars and fifty cents every month.'"

"Well, I told him 'All right, I will work for you.' So every day I sat by that garden with a can of feed, and when the chickens came I put a little feed down, away from the garden and kept them out without having to work very hard."

"For one month I did that and then the man—he was Governor Douglas—gave me money and a letter to the Hudson's Bay store telling them to give me a Chinaman's coat that would not be too big for me. Well, I went along and I had to pass a baker's store. The baker called to me, 'Here, boy, come and cut wood for me, and I will give you fifty cents every week and some cakes.' My, I had often looked at his cakes and wanted to eat them, so I told him all right, I would work for him. The baker gave me a buck saw and showed me a pile of wood, and I began to work. I forgot all about Governor Douglas and his chickens."

"For six days I cut wood and then the baker gave me fifty cents and some of his cakes. My, those cakes were good! For three weeks I cut wood for the baker. Then one day while I was working a man came and stood by me and when I looked at him I saw it was that man, the Governor, and all that time I had forgotten about him. My, I was scared! 'How much money are you getting?' he asked me. I told him, 'Fifty cents every week, and the baker gives me cakes.' Well, Governor Douglas laughed and he laughed. 'All right,' he said. 'When you get tired and there are no cakes left for you, come back and I will find you some work.'"

Cyth-Layta shook his old head. "I never went back to work for him," he said. "He was a good man. I often think of him, but those cakes were what I liked."

"Come! another time," he invited, as we heard my boat whistling. "I want to remember some stories for you—good stories."

I promised I would come before long, and left the two old fellows sitting together looking away through the pass that they had known for so many years and dreaming their dreams of bygone days.

Tibetans Remove Weeds Before Taking Crop

AN interesting picture of harvesting in Tibet on the southwestern border of China beyond the Himalayan Mountains is given by F. Kingdom Ward in his "Eleventh Expedition of Asia." The corn (wheat) is now being built into "stooks," he writes, "but the weather was so bad there seems no prospect of drying it for some time. The harvesting operations were interesting. Before anything else is done, the weeds are pulled up, tied into bundles, and carried away for fodder. Needless to state, they form a large proportion of the cornfield. Next, the wheat is reaped with sickles, and the stems pulled through a large wooden comb, which takes off the ears, these being thrown into baskets. Finally the ears are flailed, and the grain winnowed, every process being done by hand. Ploughing is done by yak (the Tibetan ox), and sowing is, of course, by hand. Agricultural machinery has not yet found its way into Tibet, and as the country could not support a large population, is not likely to for the present."

Guy Fawkes' Day in London Fifty Years Ago

By ALICE PAGE

"HERE you Dick, you come out of it now, if you are going to get any money today, you'll have to get that Guy out, its 9 o'clock," shouted Dick's mother. Dick scrambled up. "Hurrah," he cried, "fifth of November, Guy Fawkes' Day." He scurried down the stairs, grabbed a piece of bread and dripping and was out the back door. He opened the door of the coal shed and looked proudly at the Guy he and two chums had been busy making for the last two weeks. "Crikey! he's a regular corker," he said as he started to pull the chair the Guy was tied to out of the coal shed. "Ere, 'arf a mo," expostulated a grubby boy who was coming through the broken fence from next door. "You'll break that blooming chair, an' don't fergit my Ma want's it back, she's only lent it."

"Well, give us a hand then," said Dick, "you ought to have bin here before."

"Garn," jeered the boy whose name was Joe, "you've only just crawled out yerself."

The two boys lifted the chair, which was pretty ancient, and carried it into the yard. "Hallo! So you got him out," observed a third boy, coming through the back fence. "I couldn't get 'ere before, I had to go and get a pen'oth of tea for my muvver." "Oh, yes, I bet yer did, we bin waiting for yer fer hours and' hours, ain't we Dick?" said Joe, "come on now, pick 'old of these poles." The poles were two broom sticks which were put through the chair under the seat from back to front. A boy got between the two in front and grasped them while Joe took the two at the back.

Through the back door they went into the passage and out of the front door, where they set the chair down.

"Come an' have a look at him, Ma, before we go," called Dick; and Ma came out of the wash house, the soap suds up to her elbows, for she took in washing. "I saw him when you brought him through the wash house," she grumbled. Then she brightened up. "That's what I call a regular corker," she approved. "Now you mind, Dick, you take care of Mrs. Carter's chair an' yer Dad's top hat; that hat does alright for a rainy day," she added as she went back to the wash tub.

It was an awful old hat and was only fit for a Guy, but Dick's father was a London caddy and sat on an outside seat on his cab, wet or fine, morning, noon and night. A gentleman had given Dick's father one of his cast-off top hats, so being a fine day, Dick was able to borrow the old one for the Guy; and a jolly good Guy he was, too. The boys had been very busy for days gathering shavings, straw and paper at the back of the shops. He had an old pair of pants, only a little broken at the knees, where the straw would persist in sticking through. An old coat long discarded by the caddy, an old pair of spring sides (boots with elastic let in the sides), which were tied to the trouser bottoms with string; a pair of gloves, which years before, must have been grey, or even white; and a very red mask with a very big red nose. His arms swung as the boys walked, which made the poor old Guy look so helpless, especially as his head wobbled as if it was trying hard to keep its balance and couldn't.

The boys left the poor district in which they lived in London and struck into the suburbs. "Look what's coming you fellers," exclaimed Dick. "Lummie Liza," exclaimed Joe, "ain't he a regular la-de-da." "He" was another Guy borne along by two men. This Guy Fawkes was dressed in an evening dress suit, white shirt front, top hat, spats on his boots and a handkerchief in his pocket. The boys silently and respectfully stood on the curb as the handsome Guy went past. "Well," said Joe, "you ever see a gentleman with a clay pipe in his mouth; they oughten to a stick that in his mouth. They didn't smoke no bacco in them days anyhow." "I bet yer they did," argued Dick, "those fellers ought to know, look what a toff their Guy was, handkerchief and all." "Well, we can have a handkerchief too," said Joe. Pull that rag off yer knee, Dick, an' give it here." Dick had fallen and cut his knee and it was tied up with a dirty piece of rag. "Not on yer life," he said, "I don't want the blood all running down my leg." "Garn, chuck it," said Joe, "that'll do yer good to let a little of the mad blood out of yer." So much against Dick's wishes the rag was taken off and put in the Guy's breast coat pocket for a handkerchief. "Ain't he a regular corker," chuckled Joe. "Come on boys, let's get to work," said Ted, the third boy, whose duty it was to hammer at the doors and collect the money. "Here you are boys," said Joe, setting the chair down in front of a likely looking house, "now then, altogether!"

Hurra, hurra, hurra.

Remember, remember the fifth of November,
The gunpowder treason plot.
I see no reason why gunpowder treason
Should ever be forgot.

Guy Fawkes, Guy, 'twas his intent
To blow up the King and the Parliament.
Four score barrels of powder below,
Poor old England to overthrow.

A loaf of bread to feed the bloke
And a pen'oth of cheese to choke him,
A pint of beer to wash it down
And a jolly good fire to burn him.

Guy Fawkes, Guy,
Poke him in the eye,
Stick him up a lamp post,
And there let him die.

Hollo boys, hollo boys,
Make the bells ring.
Hollo boys, hollo boys,
God save the King.
Hurra, hurra, hurra.

Ted went up the steps, raised the brass knocker and brought it down with such a bang that it helped to open the door as a man turned the latch. Ted touched his cap. "Please remember the poor old Guy," he said. "Here you are boy," said the man, "and don't bang so hard at the next house or you will get kicked down the steps." Before Ted could thank him the door slammed and Ted went back to the Guy. "Tuppence boys," he said gleefully.

The next house they stopped at, a man opened the door as Ted went up the steps. "Go away and take your old Guy with you, you boys are a perfect nuisance," he said as he stood on the top step and shook his fist at them. Ted stopped at the gate. "Boo! Another blooming Guy," he shouted, then joined the boys with the Guy and up the street they went. "Here's some kids at the window, we'll stop here," said Ted. Before Ted could get up the steps the door opened and two little girls came dancing down. "The eldest handed Ted a penny. 'Yours is the nicest Guy we have seen,' said Louise, 'and if you say anything over again Mama says she will give you another penny.' So the boys said it all over again and Louise ran out with another penny. 'Crikey,' said Ted, 'ain't she pretty, she's a regular Donah.' 'Yes,' said Dick admiringly, 'her face is the color of them brown eggs you see in the shops.' 'Yes, an' her fat curls is as big as German sausages, ain't they,' said Ted as he gazed up at the window. 'Oh! come on,' urged Joe impatiently, 'we'll never get the half crown my mother wants. For hours the boys tramped the streets with the Guy, getting a penny here and another there. They were very weary boys and hungry, too, when they finally reached the home street. They stopped at the corner grocery store, went through the usual performance, then Ted stepped into the shop. 'Please remember the poor old Guy, mister.' 'No,' said the man behind the counter. 'I've given enough today.' 'Well,' said Ted in a disappointed voice, 'you ought to give me something, my mother deals here.'

"Yes, she deals here alright," said the grocer, "but she never pays for what she gets. See that clock up there?" Ted looked up at the clock. He had never seen it before. It had no hands and across its face was printed: "No Tick Here." "That's my motto now," said the grocer. "Your mother owes me more than she will ever be able to pay, my boy." Ted went out to his mama. "That's a knock out," he grumbled, "we got to pay for every blessed thing we get there now. I bet my mother will change her grocer."

The boys carried the Guy into the back yard and were instantly joined by three mothers, and by the time the money was shared out, the three mothers got two shillings and fourpence each and three boys one penny each. "Dick," whispered Ted, "next year we shaves out before we get home."

After a hasty tea, the boys set out for the waste piece of land where the bonfire was built. It was a huge pile of rubbish where, for the last month, everyone who cared to carried all their burnable rubbish, including old mattresses. The men with the Guy had already arrived and had set a ladder against the pile of rubbish. Now a man hoisted the Guy, chair and all, onto his shoulders and started up the ladder. After a bit of trouble, he finally managed to get the old chair perched safely on the top. There was a ringing cheer as half a dozen sprang forward to light the pile. As the flames reached the Guy's feet, bang! bang! went the fire crackers tucked into the bottom of his pant legs. Bang! bang! went the squibs tied in his hands. As the flames caught his head, crackers and squibs flew in every direction, indeed he seemed stuffed full of fireworks. The people cheered as he toppled over backwards and ended in a glorious burst of flame and fireworks. "Well," said Ted, "a whole blooming year before we see another Guy." "I should think you had seen enough Guys today," said Dick. "Why I saw twenty-seven." "Bah!" retorted Ted, "I saw mor'n that."

Mrs. Nestor Noel

MANY readers of this page will be very sorry to learn that Mrs. Nestor Noel will write no more stories for the children. For some years that lady was a contributor to this page. Only last week some of her work, intended for a future issue was received. Her stories always tended to make their readers kinder and more helpful. On behalf of the children, the editor offers sympathy to her daughters and husband in their great sorrow.

The Children's Page

NEXT week your editor will take a holiday and many of you will tell children and grown-ups how you spent your holidays. The editor is afraid all the stories contributed cannot be put into one page. Thank you all very much. Everyone has done so well that it is hard to select the best. Next Sunday will show that Victoria has many very happy young people. There will be no dry articles for that day. It is hoped all readers will enjoy the page as much as your editor liked the letters.

No Wonder the Dormouse Went to Sleep

How maddening! In fact it's the Mad Tea Party scene in the film production of "Alice in Wonderland" and is one reason why the Dormouse went to sleep. How could he be expected to keep awake by such confusing conversation as the Mad Hatter and the March Hare conducted. Even Alice got a bit desperate and decided there was something wrong with "Wonderland." Above is shown Charlotte Henry as Alice; Edward Everett Horton as the Mad Hatter; Jackie Searle as the sleepy Dormouse, although you won't recognize him behind his furry make-up; and Charlie Ruggles as the March Hare, a man in rabbit's clothing, to parody the old saw of a sheep in wolf's clothing.

Last Week's Anniversaries

Sir Walter Raleigh

ON October 29, 1618, in the reign of James the First, Sir Walter Raleigh was executed for the crime of treason, of which he was never proved guilty. Brave soldier, polished courtier, daring explorer and adventurer, historian and poet, his name has been held in honor by all generations of British people who have lived since his time. Walter Raleigh was born in Devonshire in 1552. As a young man he fought in France and the Low Countries. He crossed the Atlantic with his heroic half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, but failed to plant a colony in America. He distinguished himself for bravery as a captain in Ireland during a rebellion in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. On his return, the handsome soldier became a favorite of the great sovereign. It began, so it is said, by Raleigh throwing his cloak on the muddy road so that the Queen should not wet her slippers. Many more and greater services did Raleigh render, helping to defeat the great Spanish Armada. Before that, Raleigh had taken possession of Virginia in the Queen's name and brought to Europe the tobacco and potato plants. The Queen's favorite had enemies, and shortly after James I came to the throne Raleigh was accused of treason and was shut up in the Tower. There he remained for thirteen years, writing a history of the world. At last the prisoner told the King of a city of gold and gems he believed to be in South America. James needed money and fitted out an expedition. The search for the treasure failed. Raleigh lost his son, and this noble Englishman returned to prison to meet his death.

Benjamin Ward Richardson, M.D.

ON October 31, 1821, Benjamin Ward Richardson was born at Somerby, in the county of Leicestershire, in England. He grew up to be a famous doctor. His schoolmaster was the Rev. W. W. Nutt, who kept a school in the same county. He then went to a university in Glasgow, afterwards studying medicine at the famous university of St. Andrews. Perhaps there is not one of us who in some way does not owe a debt of gratitude to this physician of the nineteenth century. He learned and taught a great deal about those diseases which spread among people, especially children. Dr. Richardson in 1868 discovered the application of ether spray to enable the dentist or surgeon to remove a tooth or other diseased part without pain. When your pet cannot get well, you can send him where he can be put to sleep (a lethal chamber) without suffering. This is due to discoveries by Dr. Richardson. He was among those who taught people how to prevent sickness of several kinds. He was honored in many countries besides in England and Scotland. Discoveries in the science of medicine have been made since Dr. Richardson wrote, and many doctors since his time have, by patient toil, learned how to cure the ills of our bodies, or better still, to prevent them. All honor to them. There is still much to do in this great field. Perhaps some boy who reads this may enter it.

Rev. John MacLean

ON October 30, 1861, John MacLean was born at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland. This baby lived to do good work for Canada. After going to school in Dumfries he came to Canada soon after Confederation. Joining the Methodist Church, young MacLean went to college in Coburg, Ontario. After he graduated, he saw that there was great need for missionaries among the Indians and settlers in the Northwest. He offered his services and was sent to the reserve of the Blood Indians near MacLeod, Alberta. After laboring there for a time, Mr. MacLean removed to Moose Jaw, in Saskatchewan, then a small town. This minister did not forget the people who were his first charge. He wrote several books and papers about the Indians of the plains, their languages and customs. He did not forget to tell about the missionaries who first labored among them. As time went on and many settlers came into the great valley of the Saskatchewan, Mr. MacLean worked as Inspector of Schools and a member of the Board of Examiners for teachers. In more recent years Mr. MacLean wrote several books, among which are "The Indians of Canada," "Our Savage Folk," "The Hero of Saskatchewan," and several others. He was said to be one of the best authorities on the Indians of Canada. Canadians should remember and honor the men who labored, often at the risk of danger and privation, to teach Christianity to the Indian tribes of our country. Not less important was their task among the lonely pioneers. To them they brought comfort, and kept alive in a strange land the faith they brought from their homes in the Motherland or in Eastern Canada. Among the makers of Canada, the Christian missionaries of all denominations have a foremost place.

Earthquake in Lisbon

ON November 1, 1755, the city of Lisbon, the capital of Portugal, was visited by a terrible earthquake. It was All Saints' Day and the churches were filled with people. Many of them fell burying the worshippers in the ruins. Nearly 60,000 people lost their lives while many others were injured. The shocks were felt in Africa and America and as far North as Scotland. The centre of the disturbance was far out in the Atlantic, it was afterwards found. The sea left the harbor but soon came back in an awful wave, engulfing the ships that had been left high and dry. Lisbon is a very old city. Its site, on the Tagus River, commands a grand prospect and the newer parts have splendid streets, and buildings and squares.

Marie Antoinette

MARIE Antoinette was born on November 2, 1755. Her mother was Marie Theresa, a famous Queen and her father, Francis, first Emperor of Austria.

Marie was a lovely child and grew to be a charming and beautiful woman. Her childhood was happy. Her sisters and the musician Mozart were her playfellows. This joyous care-free life was all too short. When she was thirteen the Princess was engaged to the son of Louis Fifteenth, King of France, a boy of fifteen. They were married next year. The children were allowed all sorts of expensive amusements though the people of France were terribly poor. When she was nineteen, the King died and her husband was crowned as Louis XVI. He gave her when she became Queen a marvelous little palace called the Trianon, where she could live with her children, two boys and a little girl. The Queen was fond of pleasure and generous, but she could not understand that the misery of the common people was so great that they could no longer pay the taxes needed to pay for the extravagance of the court. ### With Growing Interest

A certain sum of money is invested, and at the end of the first year the interest amounts to £320. This is added to the principal, and the interest on the total at the end of the next year at the same rate amounts to £322 16s. What was the original sum of money invested?

What Bird Is This?

In the bough but not in the tree,
In the mirth but not in the glee,
In the chart but not in the map,
In the hat but not in the cap,
In the verb but not in the noun,
In the frock but not in the gown,
In the lone but not in the sole,
A bird of marsh and swamp is my whole.

Words That Rhyme

Each couplet gives the clues to two words which are pronounced in a similar way, though they are spelled differently and have different meanings.

On farms they usually are found,
A waterside town, on English ground.
Plant wire fixed to lamp.
Little spots your skin may stamp.
A slitch in time they say saves nine.
And thus we'll call it, just to rhyme.

Behatted Word

I have control o'er snow and ice;
The birds they hail me with delight:
To add the poor I do suffice,
And all who read will own my might;
When of my head I am bereft,
I at the harvest-time do show;
And then at Winter, if I'm left,
You'll find me lost in frost and snow.
Once more behold me, and I send
A thrill to pierce the hardest heart;
I with the thunderbolt descend,
And now to find me is your part.
But, ere you read my last, don't fail
To add a letter to my tail.

An Old Story Retold

HERE is another version of an old story. It was found in The Children's News-paper.

No Indeed! (Ma Foi Non!)

In ancient times there was a French king who brooded all day. Nothing could cheer him up. Whenever his son or his courtiers suggested that this or that might provide entertainment for him the monarch would shake his head and say sadly: Ma foi non! (No indeed!).

At last a foreign physician made his appearance.

"Can you cure my father?" asked the king's son. And he described the symptoms.

"Ma foi oui! (Indeed I can!)" replied the physician. "All he needs is to wear for one day the shirt of a man who is completely happy."

This seemed easy, and instantly the whole countryside was scoured in order to discover a happy man. Alas! When evening came all the courtiers returned to the palace empty-handed. They had indeed discovered several men who seemed happy enough; but, when closely questioned, each of these had to admit that something was lacking for his complete happiness.

The prince was more successful. He discovered a peasant living simply in a humble cottage. The peasant slept well, worked well, and ate well.

"Ma foi oui!" answered the peasant with a grin.

"Then," said the prince, "will you sell me your shirt?"

"Sell you my shirt?" answered the peasant. "Ma foi non! I haven't one!"

This Dog's Life

By DAVID NEWELL
Newfoundland

I know you've read accounts of how
In days gone by, and even now,
The Newfoundland swims out and saves
His little master from the waves.

He's faithful, steady, gentle, wise,
With wondrous strength and massive size:
It seems a shame that such a breed
Has been allowed to go to seed!

From bitter cold he's seldom sick,
His shaggy coat is soft and thick,
And when he's swimming, sheds the water
Just like the fur of seal or otter.

You'd never need to fear the sea
If you could swim as well as he:
But since you can't it's best to stay
In shallow water when you play!

King Baby

Very lovely is the confidence of childhood. We do well to speak of King Baby, for the right by which a little child shall rule is a divine, sweet right and sanctity than ever was accorded to kings. It is the unalienable right, the royal prerogative, of every child to come into this world assured that its coming will set joybells of the heart a-ringing.

Timely Hints on Planting Alpines in Rock Garden

THE present is a suitable time for planting many choice alpines. The soil still retains sufficient warmth to encourage immediate root action, and plants that are purchased in pots suffer little or no check if handled carefully. Even plants lifted from the open ground will, in many cases, re-establish themselves quite rapidly and satisfactorily, though it is advisable to get such replanted as quickly as possible. Roots soon dry if left exposed to the air, and then it is much more difficult for them to grow away freely in their new quarters.

Soil texture is the all-important matter in the cultivation of most genuine alpine plants. Nourishment is seldom lacking, for these mountaineers are accustomed to battling their way through stony soils that are far too poor to maintain the larger and more lush vegetation of the lowlands. But in the garden they frequently languish on account of poor drainage, or a soil that is too close and adhesive.

Preparing the Soil

WHEN building a rock garden the constructor should always commence by excavating all the soil to a depth of at least eighteen inches (two feet is better), and placing a good layer of large clinkers in the bottom. In this manner the foundations are properly laid. The existing soil will almost certainly require some alteration, not in richness, but in texture, as already indicated. Sharp river sand, stone chippings, old mortar rubble, good leaf mould, and fibrous peat are the ingredients most likely to prove beneficial. They should be added to the existing soil, or mixed with light loam if the soil of the garden is very heavy and intractable, till the mixture is nicely porous in texture, gritty yet not harsh to the touch, and with a sufficiency of humus to give it a darkened appearance. The mixture can be varied a little to suit plants with differing tastes—here made darker and more spongy for the moisture-lovers, elsewhere prepared for plants from the higher mountain slopes by an extra quantity of stone chippings and sand.

Pockets filled with special mixtures are worse than useless. They are quickly exhausted, and roots frequently show great unwillingness to leave one type of soil for another. They remain huddled up in the pocket, and the plant gradually becomes sickly and dies.

Avoiding Trouble When Gradually Drying Off the Dairy Cow

A GREAT deal of the udder trouble in cows is caused by the manner in which the milk is attended to the udder at the "drying off" period. Perhaps in no time of her lactation period is the dairy cow in greater danger of "going wrong" in her udder than during the time of "drying off." In the dairy cow the udder is a very important organ, as it is the direct means of making milk, which is the dairy cow's function. Thus a knowledge of the physiology of her udder is most important, inasmuch as it will help to avoid many of the ills which are so common in the dairyman's herd.

From the construction of this organ, the enormous number of cells and their avenues through which the material for milk production passes in its course before the finished product is accomplished, it will be readily seen that any injury, congestion or other unnatural condition will readily cause trouble in this delicate and complicated organism.

Cause of Troubles

IN the "drying off" process with many cows there is very little danger of trouble on account of their all too ready disposition in that direction; but with others, particularly those which are naturally persistent milkers, there is great danger of complications arising that will cause inflammation and ultimate hardening and destruction of cell composition.

In order to avoid any disorder of this kind an animal with a strong inclination to "hang on," should be put on a ration calculated to reduce the raw milk flow and milked once a day for a few days. As soon as she drops in quantity another milking period may be omitted; and still another as the flow diminishes until two or three days elapse between milkings or until the cow is finally dry.

Stripping

IN the process, however, great care should be exercised that no thickened milk should be allowed to accumulate. If any should form during the process the cow should be stripped out quite frequently until this tendency entirely disappears. If this is not done, inflammation will set in and when next the animal freshens there will likely be trouble and a lost quarter will be the result.

No good cow should be pronounced dry and be allowed to go week after week without examination. On the contrary, she should be looked after occasionally all through her dry period as it sometimes happens that a cow will secrete enough fluid to cause trouble weeks after regular milking has been discontinued.

Some Are Hard

AND again, some cows are so strongly inclined to the milking habit that it is almost, if not quite, impossible to get them to go entirely dry, without resorting to undesirable methods, such as drugging, etc. With this kind the best plan is to feed nourishing food to keep up the strength and develop the growing calf and continue the milking.

In stripping cows out for drying off it is better to milk out dry occasionally, rather than taking part out often, and leave a portion, which is liable to thicken and destroy the cell tissues.

However, by proper care and management, few animals will be found that cannot be safely dried off without danger of serious complications.

It is partly for this reason that it is never wise to plant alpines in pots exactly as they are tapped from these receptacles. The close ball of soil acts like a pocket and tends to retain all the roots. First, the drainage crocks should be removed from the bottom of the pot ball and the roots slightly loosened with the fingers so that a few of them may be spread out into the new soil. If the plants are given a good soaking of water a day before they are required, this slight unravelling can be done quite easily without disturbing the whole ball of soil.

Keep Roots Covered

TAP the plants out as they are required. Do not have any lying about on the ground with their roots exposed. Much damage may be done in a very short time, especially if a drying wind is blowing.

Alpines should be planted slightly more deeply than they were in their pots or the nursery bed. It will be sufficient if the old soil is covered with an eighth of an inch of the new compost. This should be made firm all round with the fingers. It is a good plan to finish off with a scattering of stone chippings on the surface, and particularly around the collar of the plant, as this helps to keep off slugs and improves drainage at a vital point. Many alpines rot away at the collar during the winter owing to our excessive rainfall.

Inspect Frequently

THIS firming should be repeated from time to time during the winter, for hard frosts are likely to freeze the soil below the plants, and so tend to loosen them. It is always wise to inspect newly-planted subjects as soon as possible after a very cold spell.

Planting in crevices frequently presents great difficulties. The ideal is to build the plants into position, first placing one boulder correctly, then laying the plant against it, and packing good compost around the roots, and finally bringing the second rock into position, and so holding all in place. Where this method is impracticable, it is necessary to start with very small plants, and to introduce the roots to the crevice as carefully as may be. A sick, rounded off at the end, will be found useful for coaxing the roots into the crevices and pressing soil to them.

Selecting Sound Ewes to Be Kept for the Breeding Flock

AUTUMN is the time when farmers should inspect their sheep flocks very carefully. The quality of the lambs and the profits derived depend in large measure on the care exercised in selecting the breeding ewes. In making this selection, points such as age, appearance, conformation, soundness and fleece are all considered.

The old ewes should be discarded. Animals seven years and older should not be kept in the flock unless exceptionally sound and healthy. On the other hand, ewe lambs are generally not well enough developed to be included in the flock. It has been found advantageous to breed ewes for the first time as yearlings. They are more reliable breeders and better lambs are obtained.

Condition Is Important

CHOOSE well grown, healthy and active individuals. Small and unthrifty ewes are likely to produce slow maturing and undersized lambs. A clear skin, bright eyes and lustrous fleece, containing plenty of yolk, generally indicate good health. Condition is also important, but one must make allowance for the ewe that has nursed twins.

Since emphasis is being placed on mutton type it will be necessary to select fairly low-set animals with broad, deep and capacious bodies. Avoid the upstanding narrow-chested individuals. They are usually a disappointment as reproducers.

Mouths and Udders

EWES with broken mouths should be eliminated without hesitation. They cannot handle sufficient feed to nourish a lamb and maintain themselves. Quite often through accident or disease, an ewe has lost her udder or part of it. Such animals are unfit for breeding. The wool is not only a source of income for the owner but also a protection against inclement weather. Consequently, choose ewes with compact, uniformly fine fleeces of fair length. The wool must extend well over the body, especially over the belly.

Selecting good ewes is not a difficult task, but the selection will be more effective if breeding and wool production records are available.

Mangels for Poultry

THE chief value of roots as a regular feed lies in the fact that they can be stored during the winter months and fed over the period during which fresh green feeds are not available. They should not be considered in any way as a complete substitute for fresh green feeds, chiefly because they are quite deficient in vitamin content. The anti-neuritic and anti-scurbutic vitamins are present in only the slightest traces, while the anti-rachitic vitamin is entirely lacking. In comparison, fresh clover, one of the most commonly used green feeds, contains all three in abundance.

The chief function of mangels and roots in general is the supplying of succulence to the ration. It has been found that by using mangels and supplementing with a regular dose of Epsom salts, laying birds will come through the winter in fairly good shape.

Turkeys for the English Market

Wearing surprised looks, these turkeys pop their heads through the netting of their cart to gaze about them as they arrive at the turkey market in Norfolk, England. Suffice it to say—it was Thanksgiving.

Storage of Corms and Tubers to Prevent Losses in Winter

IT IS not easy for the beginner to contemplate the loss of his summer-time gains. No doubt he looks at the begonias, the dahlias, the cannas, and the other summer-blooming plants, and wonders how he is going to succeed in keeping them safely through the winter. Often, because he fancies he does not possess the regulation facilities, he is tempted to throw them away and not bother. This is a tragic mistake, and anyone who has to face this storage question for the first time can take heart, because, with little convenience, all such tubers and corms can be saved.

Some may even ask why these things are dug up at all. It is done mainly to save them from getting frozen, because frost would kill them. It follows, then, that, if this is the reason for taking them out of the ground, it is of primary importance that they are not frozen where they are stored. This is the real test of any storage place. Is it safe from frost? That is not all. It must be a place where the air is fresh and dry. A damp atmosphere is almost as deadly as frost.

Cover Dahlia Tubers

DAHLIAS are the most popular of garden roots that the grower wants to keep. If not already dug up, do so at once, and try and get the tubers up without breaking them. Then, if the day is fine, leave them on top of the ground to dry, placing them in a shed at night. Turn the roots about for a week, so that they may dry thoroughly. They are then ready to be packed away. Into the bottom of a box place a covering of dry straw, and on this an inch of soil. This latter must be absolutely dry. Then place the tubers into the box and cover the fleshy parts with more dry soil, so that everything is covered except the stems. Tubers can be placed very tightly together to make the most of the room. Labels may be tied to the stems, but it is safer to place them in the soil tied to a tuber. Stems have a habit of breaking or dropping off, consequently the label is often lost or knocked away from its original plant. If a thick block of wood is placed between the boxes, it is possible to have quite a number in use. The blocks will allow air to circulate around the soil.

Salvia patens has long, finger-like tubers, and should be stored in a deep box. The roots are dug up and dried in the same way as dahlias, but the foliage should be left on during the drying period. It is cut off when the tubers are stored, and even then six inches of stem is left. Dry soil is used for roots; perfectly dry leaf mould or peat moss litter is equally efficient. These particular tubers snap so easily that rather more than ordinary care should be used when handling them. Once dry and in their storage boxes, place in the storing room.

Care of Begonias

BEGONIAS should be left in the ground till the first frost blackens the tops. Lift them with a fork, break off the frost-bitten top, and leave about three inches of stem. Rub off most of the roots and soil, but be sure not to go too near the tuber. When the soil is reduced, the tubers are placed in seed trays or shallow boxes to dry. This may take some time, but if put in the sunshine and wind, or even left in any airy shed, the outer soil dries, and can then be rubbed off. Avoid bruising the outer skin of the tuber. Once perfectly dry, place in shallow boxes, convex side downwards, and closely together, covering with dry fibre. Dry peat moss litter is probably the best medium of all in which to store begonias.

Cannas are not dried off. They are dug up with all their foliage and placed closely together in boxes. In these they are tightly packed with dry soil. It will be found that by the time real winter comes, the whole bulk of soil will be dry and the foliage ripe enough to cut down to a foot above the roots. Then, when it is feared that heavy frosts are imminent, the roots are taken into the storage room or cupboard.

Gladioli bulbs are dug up now and placed in a shed, not in a heap, but spread out. Move them about every few days, for three weeks, when the foliage can be cut off and the rubbery husks of the old corm cleaned off. Though these corms may take little harm, even if not covered (so long as they are in a frostproof room), yet they are far better if covered with some dry material till the following March.

How Cooling of Freshly Drawn Milk Aids Its Keeping Qualities

NUTRITIONAL authorities have proclaimed milk to be "the most nearly perfect food" for human beings. It is likewise an ideal food for numerous species of bacteria which, harmless in themselves, are able to grow in and spoil the flavor of the milk. While care and cleanliness in milking and subsequent handling will keep down the number of bacteria in the milk to a minimum, there will always be a small number present as it leaves the udder.

If the number always remained the same as when the milk is first drawn into the pail, there would be little need to worry over spoilage. But unfortunately for the dairyman, bacteria are able to multiply at an enormous rate. Under favorable conditions some species are able to double their numbers every half hour, so that one bacterial cell at the start would increase to 1,024 cells at the end of ten hours. When we remember that the milk delivered to the city housewife is generally at least thirty-six hours old, the importance of preventing bacterial growth is obvious.

Prompt Action Necessary

TO check the growth of bacteria, milk must be cooled promptly to a suitable temperature. Promptness of cooling is of value in conserving the so-called "germicide" property of the milk. This simply means that where milk is cooled without delay, and held at a temperature high enough for moderate growth of bacteria to take place, the rate of growth will be much slower than if cooling had been delayed.

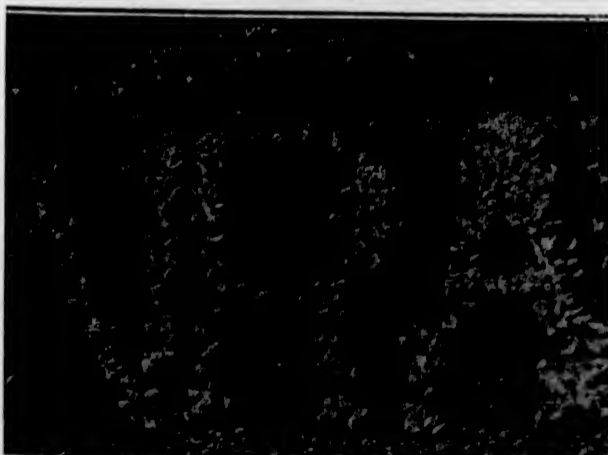

Cooling to a low enough temperature simply means making conditions so unfavorable that the milk-souring bacteria will be unable to grow. This limit is reached at about 45 degrees F., hence the efficient dairyman strives to cool the milk to below this temperature and to keep it there at all times.

Combating Couch Grass

COUCH or quack grass presents a very serious problem in many parts of Canada. Experiments have shown that ploughing as early in the summer as the crop can be removed, cultivating the land during the fall, and reploughing just before the ground freezes constitute a very satisfactory method of control. If this procedure can be followed the next year by a cultivated crop, or a smother crop practically complete eradication will be secured.

It is surprising and disheartening sometimes, says the Dominion Field Husbandman, to find that couch grass will persist even after considerable work has been done on the land. However, when right methods are followed, and provided reasonably dry weather is enjoyed, complete success may be assured.

Feeding Chickens Sign N.R.A.

While poultrymen of Petaluma, California, were busy drafting a code for their industry under the National Recovery Act, an enterprising rancher scattered feed for his flock so the birds would form the letters N.R.A. for the benefit of a visiting photographer as is seen above.

Finds Skeletal Structure No Indicator of Production

EVIDENCE is not only lacking to support the contention that there is an egg-laying type in the domestic fowl (type here being considered from the standpoint of skeletal structure), but all available evidence suggests that the type of the bird, as influenced by the skeleton, has no significant relationship to egg-producing ability. Thus, Morley A. Jull, formerly of Macdonald College, disposes of the disputed view that there is an egg-laying type of the domestic fowl which can be picked out by its visible physical characteristics.

In order to secure definite evidence as to whether there is any significant relationship between the so-called type of laying fowl and its laying ability, an extensive survey was carried out by Professor Jull and associates of the United States Department of Agriculture. All the leading poultry authorities were consulted, and a number of measurements of live birds, carcasses, and bones of dead birds were made. The conclusions arrived at, in addition to the fact that it is not possible for the human eye to separate good from poor breeders based on differences in so-called "body type," were as follows:

Not Reliable Method

LIVE bird measurements, as usually taken, are not reliable indices of the shape or type of a bird.

Live bird measurements of the length, breadth, and depth of head and of the length and breadth of back, greatest width at shoulders, and depth of body in front are of no value in the selection of birds according to their laying ability. In three out of six groups of birds, those with the shortest keels were among the best layers.

Canadian Jersey Sets World's Butterfat Record for Breed

A GAIN the record for butterfat production for all Jerseys has been surpassed, this time by the five-year-old Brampton Basilia, owned by B. H. Bull & Son, Brampton, Ont. On September 25 last, Basilia completed her test with a record of 19,000 pounds of milk and 1,312 pounds of butterfat. Not only is this the greatest butterfat record ever made by a Jersey cow, but it is the highest record for all breeds one three times a day milking.

Basilia early showed she was a superior producer. She completed her test as a two-year-old with a butterfat record of 698 pounds.

Through her sire, Basilia is distantly related to a large number of cows in British Columbia. Her great grand sire was Jersey Volunteer. This bull was the grand sire of Glamorgan Jersey Volunteer, sire in the herd of the late J. S. H. Matson, which was noted for its high production. Only five Jersey cows in Canada have ever exceeded 1,000 pounds of butterfat, and one of these was Brown Kate in the Glamorgan herd of Mr. Matson.

When the Glamorgan herd was dispersed a large number of the cows were purchased by Basil Gardom, of Dewdney. Mr. Gardom recently had the misfortune to lose three of his best cows when they were struck by a train when crossing the tracks near the Gardom farm. These cows were Glamorgan Kate's Girl, official record of 526 pounds of fat; Ruth of Glenavale, record of 576 pounds of fat, and Ruth's Sultana Rosette, 445 pounds of fat as a three-year-old on 305-day test. These cows were out of well-known dams by famous sires, and were in calf to Glamorgan's Minnie's Son, a "Class AA" bull.

Air Space for Fowls

CHICKENS breathe a pint of air per minute, or 12 cubic feet per hour. It is calculated that each bird requires at least forty cubic feet of air per hour to obviate the deleterious effect of carbon dioxide in the breathed air. The air requirement of a medium fowl weighing about 45 pounds seems to be much the same as that of a larger bird weighing 75 pounds.

Dressed carcass measurements in the group of birds measured were not highly correlated with comparable bone measurements and cannot be considered as reliable indices of egg-laying ability.

There is no significant relationship between the length, breadth, or shape of skull and egg production.

Neither the length nor the breadth nor the depth of the skull of a bird bears any relation to the total weight of eggs laid by the bird, nor to her mean egg weight.

Brain capacity bears no relation to the number, total weight, or mean weight of eggs laid by a bird.

Of No Significance

SIMPLE correlation co-efficients between egg production and each of the three measurements, length of back, width of back, width of back from femur joint to femur joint, and length of keel, are of no significance, except possibly length of keel in certain flocks.

It should be kept in mind, however, that in the selection of birds on the basis of their presumed laying ability, certain physiological characters should always be taken into consideration. The most important of these include age in days that laying commences (observations confirm the opinion widely held that high egg production is associated with earliness of maturity), the accumulation of excess tissue over various parts of the head and of fleshing in the abdomen, the bleaching of the yellow pigment from beak and shanks is an indication of the approximate number of eggs laid during a given period, and the time of year and duration of the first annual moult.

Important Amendments Made in Regulations Governing Egg Grades

IMPORTANT amendments, whereby further protection is afforded to both producers and consumers, have been made in the egg regulations by order-in-council. The new grades consist of "A-1," "A," "B," and "C" in place of "specials," "extras," "firsts" and "seconds." The words "new laid" may be applied only to grade A-1, and the word "fresh," or any other equivalent of that word, to grades A-1 and A.

Grades A-1 and A are divided respectively into three classes, large, medium and pullet, and all eggs possessing the quality of grade A may be sold in that grade irrespective of size, but the eggs of different sizes must be packed separately, with the size indicated on the container. As grade A-1 is a super grade, the packing of eggs of this grade may be done only by producers authorized by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Storage eggs are not permitted to be sold in a higher grade than B.

Two Other Main Grades

"B" GRADE consists of reasonably clean eggs, sound in shell, and eggs weighing less than the rate of 32 ounces to the dozen shall not be graded in B. There are two classes, large (24 ounces) and medium (22 to 24 ounces).

"C" grade consists of all eggs below A and B grades, but which are fit for human consumption.

When the standard grades for eggs were first legislated in 1915 there were very few eggs in Canada of sufficiently good quality to be graded as extras, and at that time the grade "firsts" represented the best quality available in commercial quantities. As a result of the improvement brought about through years of grading, the quality of Canadian eggs has been raised to the point where, during recent years, "extras" have been as plentiful as the other grades. The grade "firsts," therefore, no longer included eggs of the best available quality and was to that extent a misleading term. The adoption of the grade names A, B and C gives to egg grading a terminology in keeping with present conditions and one which consumers will readily understand.

Preference for Size

A RECOGNIZED deficiency in the previous grades was that only large eggs of the best quality could be sold in the top grade. Thus both eggs of mediocre quality and good quality small eggs were sold in the same grade. The consumer was unable to distinguish between such eggs, and the producer received a lower price for the small eggs of good quality than they merited. Under the present revisions quality is the main factor in determining grade, with eggs of different sizes within a grade to be divided into large, medium and pullet.

The present revisions have been given careful consideration for some time and it is generally felt by all interests that they represent a distinct forward step in the grading of eggs.

Lime Influence on Soil

THE influence of lime and its compounds upon the tilth or texture of the soil is most marked in the case of clays, which it renders less sticky and cohesive when wet, and more friable and mellow when dry. On light soils—sandy and gravelly loams—lime and carbonate of lime exert a beneficial influence, their action being to cement slightly the soil particles, rendering the soils somewhat heavier and more compact in texture, and, thus, less liable to dry out in seasons of drought.

Full Grown Tigress Brought Up by Hand Tame as House Cat

Diana to Make Home in London Zoo—Was Raised From Tiny Cubhood by Family in India—Fond of Motoring

LONDON.—The gift by Alfred Ezra, a vice-president of the Zoological Society, of an adult Bengal tigress has raised in an acute form the question how far it is possible to trust the large carnivores when adult. It is well known that tigers and tigresses brought up by hand become extremely tame and affectionate.

There is a popular belief that such animals suddenly develop their supposed inherent ferocity as soon as they have tasted fresh warm blood, but such stories have probably little authenticity. But when they become full grown, tigers do not realize their strength; they are always nervous creatures, and they respond almost automatically to any sudden movement by a stroke of their armed forelegs, or even by grasping the moving object in their teeth.

The tigress which has just arrived at the zoo, having made the journey in the Ss. Lahore, has been reared privately in India since she was a small cub. Until a few weeks before she left India she had never been in confinement, but ran about the house and compound of her owners, followed them for walks, played with children and dogs, went for rides in a motor car, and, in short, behaved exactly like a very tame and gentle large dog. She had never been in contact with any of her own species, since as a minute kitten she was taken from her mother.

Some months ago her owners found it necessary to dispose of her, and Sir David Ezra secured it on behalf of his brother, Alfred Ezra, as a gift to the London Zoo.

UNHAPPY IN CAGE.—The tigress, which answers to the name Diana, at first refused to go into the traveling cage, was very unhappy, and went off her food. In due course, however, she was got to the Calcutta station and was kept under careful observation by Sir David Ezra and some of her former friends. In a few days she recovered her temper and spirits, came to be petted, and took her food well. The only serious difficulty was that the roaring of other tigers and lions made her extremely nervous. Before she was shipped she had become quite accustomed to the new conditions, and was a great pet on the voyage.

On her arrival at the London gardens she was taken to the sanatorium and is being kept and petted there until she has quite settled down. She is near enough to the lion house to become accustomed to the roaring of other animals, and in due course will be moved to one of the largest dens in the lion house.

SLUM CLEARING TO BE SPEEDED

Minister of Health Says $100,000,000 to Be Spent Annually

LONDON.—Sir Hilton Young, Minister of Health, referring at the Conservative Party Conference in Birmingham to his anti-slum campaign, said the result of the first stage was very good and he saw in it the promise of successful achievement.

"I decided," continued Sir Hilton, "that we must set before us as our goal the clearance in five years of some 200,000 houses and the consequent rehousing of some millions of our fellow citizens. Could we do that, we should have broken the back of the slum evil."

"I am glad to say that the estimate based on the returns already received shows that the goal should be attained and passed."

"The estimated totals from these returns provide for the clearance of 210,000 houses, and the rehousing of about 1,050,000 people in five years. That is a very big effort."

"The cost will represent a total capital outlay in five years of $95,000,000, or $19,000,000 a year."

"In the work of slum clearance we shall be going twenty times faster than we have ever gone before. It is a great acceleration, but not too great."

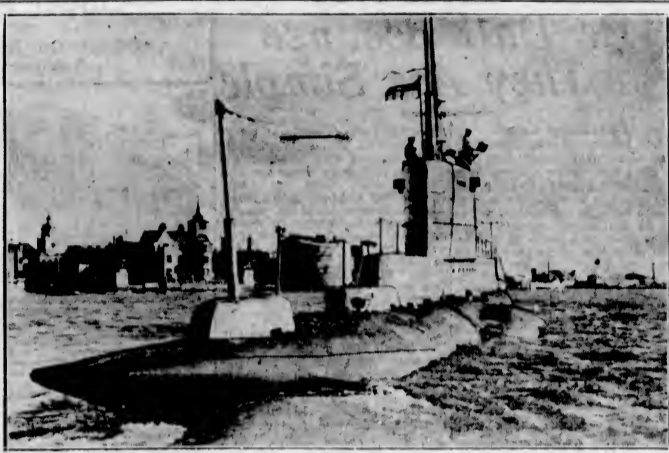

"The Government is determined to see this matter through, and now that it is assured that the bulk of local authorities will take up the task with energy and vision, there is less excuse for the laggard and the defaulter."

NICE BOY WANTED FOR TASMANIA

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—There is a job waiting in Tasmania for a very nice youth. A Sydney clergyman, who conducts a private employment bureau for out-of-work boys and girls, has been asked by a Tasmanian leader of a small church set for a youth who can comply with the following specifications: "Young, orphan, preferably non-smoker and non-drinker, good Christian, character beyond question; very affectionate, smart, not chase girls, and, above all, be talkie-mad; intelligent, smart in action and ability."

The Sydney clergyman declared he would not take the risk of recommending such a youth if he knew him. "Any father who had a son like that would give him a good hiding," he said. "He would be about the most degenerate son ever heard of. A lad with no more ginger in him than that ought not to be encouraged. My Tasmanian friend is not asking for a boy. He wants a monkey."

Diver Witnesses Battle Between Two Giant Eels

One Sixteen Feet Long and Other Nearly Six—Man Kills Smaller With Knife Under Deck of Brighton Pier

BRIGHTON.—A terrific battle between two giant eels, one sixteen feet long and as thick as a man's thigh, is stated to have threatened the safety of a diver working beneath the deck of the Brighton West Pier.

The diver was A. J. Bear, of St. Andrews Road, Felixstowe, who had been sent down to fill some cylinders on the sea bed with cement.

"It was like the fight between fish which you see in films of the tropics," he told me. "The sixteen-foot-long eel had curled up in one of the cylinders when it was disturbed by a smaller one, about five feet long, and then the trouble started. They lashed around in the sea, coiling around one another and biting as hard as they could. I watched them fight for about ten minutes, and then crept up behind them, although I knew that they could easily cut through my canvas and rubber diving suit."

"I drew my knife and attacked the smaller eel with it. After seven cuts I managed to cut it in half, and the bigger eel then disappeared. If I had left them there I should have run considerable risk in dislodging the eel which won the battle."

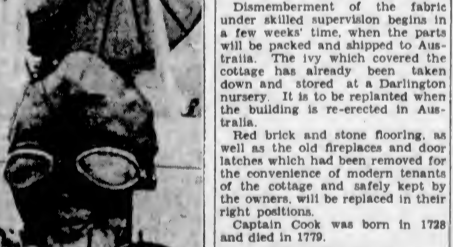

Bear carried the two halves of his victim onto the pier deck, where they were cut into portions and handed out to members of the pier staff for supper.

Only Nine of Children in Siege Living

CHILTERNHAM, England (CP).—A man and a woman who were children living in the residency at Lucknow during the Indian Mutiny seventy-six years ago, when Generals Outram and Havelock cut through the mutineers who were besieging the city and joined hands with the British garrison before being themselves invested, met at a reunion dinner at Chilternham recently.

They are: Arthur P. Dashwood, of London, who was born during the siege, and Mrs. Kathleen Haynes, daughter of Thomas Henry Kavanagh, whose heroism in escaping through native lines in disguise and guiding Sir Colin Campbell's relief force into the city was rewarded with the Victoria Cross. It is said that all the children in Lucknow at the time only nine now survive.

New Airplane Armament

Disembodiment of the fabric under skilled supervision begins in a few weeks' time, when the parts will be packed and shipped to Australia. The ivy which covered the cottage has already been taken down and stored at a Darlington nursery. It is to be replanted when the building is re-erected in Australia.

Red brick and stone flooring, as well as old-fashioned pianos, are being taken to the new building. A deck-chair has wheels for easy transport. A cake of soap has been embedded in it, so that it may be hung up; a thumb has a thread-cutting attached, together with a clip for pulling the needle through obstinate material, and a head-rest for the bath is made of rubber, which sticks to the bath by suction. A bathing costume that may be removed upwards and downwards by means of a button of proofed paper, intended for sale at football matches when a rain-storm comes, are other exhibits.

English Cities War on Housing Modernly Unfit

Manchester, Leeds and Other Large Centres Make Plans for Demolishing Thousands of Houses to Make Way for Progress

MANCHESTER (CP).—The call for a general war upon the slums, made by the National Government and reinforced in a remarkable speech by the Prince of Wales in the city of London during the summer, appears to have been taken up with earnestness by municipal and smaller authorities throughout the country.

The Ministry of Health asked these authorities to send in plans for a five-year campaign of slum clearance within their own areas. The local governing bodies have proved most ready in their response. The London County Council contemplates a ten-year programme, the first half of which provides for the re-housing of 125,000 people at a cost of $17,500,000.

MAKES ALCOHOL FROM POTATOES

Free State Plans to Construct Factories in Tubero-growing Sections

DUBLIN (BUP).—A new industry which will give a great stimulus to potato farming is to be launched by the Irish Free State Government.

It proposes to create a $5,000,000 State development fund to finance the best sugar manufactured in the country, and also to start the manufacture on a commercial scale of alcohol from potatoes.

It is claimed that alcohol for industrial purposes, or even for conversion into a potent spirit like brandy, can be obtained from potatoes at the cost of sixpence a gallon.

OTHER PRODUCTS.—It is also hoped to obtain from the potatoes which bulk so largely in Irish agriculture, motor-car spirit, dyes and fuel for spirit lamps.

The plan is to set up, through the Free State, factories where the potatoes would be pulped and fermented, and the industrial alcohol distilled from it. The distilleries would be in the centre of the potato-farming areas.

The alcohol can be put to a variety of uses. It will be mixed with petrol for use in motor cars. Its volatile oils will be used in scents, and its resins and lacquer products used in connection with the new plastic and coach-building industries which the Government is anxious to stimulate.

MANY INVENTIONS MAKE LIFE EASIER

Variety of Devices Displayed at Exhibition—One Lift Telephone Receiver for Speaker

LONDON.—At the International Exhibition of Inventions at the Crystal Palace, Westminster, a few of the inventions displayed might be characterized as making life almost too easy. One of them was a telephone receiver which the business man when he steps on a pedal or presses his writing pad; another is a stand for pens and pencils which are fitted with metal clips and cling to the stand by magnetism. A third is a funnel into which a soap assistant may drop change, the funnel then dropping it into the customer's palms.

Many domestic labor-saving devices are exhibited. A four-legged table has one pair of legs pivoted, to adapt themselves to an uneven floor. A deck-chair has wheels for easy transport. A cake of soap has been embedded in it, so that it may be hung up; a thumb has a thread-cutting attached, together with a clip for pulling the needle through obstinate material, and a head-rest for the bath is made of rubber, which sticks to the bath by suction. A bathing costume that may be removed upwards and downwards by means of a button of proofed paper, intended for sale at football matches when a rain-storm comes, are other exhibits.

Export Orders of Boots and Shoes Record for Fair

LONDON.—Export orders amounting to about $1,200,000 are reported by British boot and shoe manufacturers at the Shoe and Leather Fair, which was held recently at the Agricultural Hall, Islington.

This figure is stated by an official of the fair to be a record.

MAYOR SETS FIRE TO OLD HOUSES

Ceremony Marks Destruction of Condemned Bungalows—Undignified Retreat Is Necessary

DUDLEY, England (CP).—After a condemned "bungalow town" at Dudley had been set on fire by the Mayor the fire brigade had to save the Mayor from the flames of a school. Twenty bungalows were burned down and eighty remain to be destroyed.

But the civic dignitaries were forced to beat an undignified retreat as the flames roared up. Soon the colony was an inferno, and the flames could be seen for miles around. Motorists passing along the main Birmingham road left their cars to watch the blaze. In the crowd were the former tenants of the bungalows, who have been given accommodation in other parts of the town.

BOARD IGNORES "YOUTH" CALL

Official About to Retire Appointed Chief Engineer of Water System

LONDON.—While younger men are everywhere capturing big salaries, the Metropolitan Water Board is to entrust its $4,000,000 scheme for reorganizing London's water supply to a man about to retire on pension at the age of sixty.

He is Lieut.-Col. J. R. Davidson, who is shortly to retire from his post as chief engineer of the Liverpool waterworks. His appointment means that in addition to his pension he will receive $5,000 a year for five years from the Metropolitan Water Board as its chief engineer.

STRIKING CONTRAST

This choice is in striking contrast to recent appointments. It is made, states the general purposes committee of the Metropolitan Water Board, with the object of securing "for a limited period the services of a water engineer of the highest distinction and experience."

THE MILK "KING"

The post of manager of the new Milk Marketing Board, recently went to Mr. Sidney Foster, aged forty-seven. The business he manages has an annual turnover of between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000.

Other important appointments on the Milk Board and the Bacon Marketing Board are similarly governed by a low-age clause.

The recent decision of Lord Trenchard to retire superintendents at fifty, and chief inspectors at forty-seven, from the Metropolitan Police was the outstanding example of the cry for youth.

LACKMOOR, Hampshire.—A story of how two men attacked a soldier, saturated his clothes with petrol, and then set them alight is being investigated by the Hampshire police. The soldier is Driver Arthur Lane, aged thirty, attached to the 2nd Medium Brigade, Royal Artillery, stationed at Longmoor Camp, near here. He is now in the Cambridge Hospital, Aldershot, suffering from serious burns to the arms, legs and back.

PROSPERITY CORNER NEAR

Exchequer Returns Put Britons in Cheerful Mood—Taxes May Be Cut

LONDON (UP).—Signs that Britain may be only a block or two from that corner around which prosperity lies are seen in the exchequer returns for the first half of 1933, just issued.

Experts declare that they are so satisfied that John Citizen, the world's most heavily taxed person, can hope for some relief in the New Year. In particular, he can hope that the present income tax rate of 25 per cent will be reduced.

The chief point of the returns is that there has been a saving in expenditure of more than $35,000,000, and a net increase in revenue of more than $7,000,000, compared with the first half of last year.

DEFICIT REDUCED

Expenditure between April 1 and September 30 was reduced to $224,328,997, while revenue was raised to $275,736,842, thus reducing the deficit to $48,590,155. This compares with $59,457,190 expenditure, $269,528,308 revenue, and a deficit of $90,928,882, in the corresponding period of 1932.

The actual improvement amounts to $42,338,727.

The saving in expenditure has been principally due to a reduction of $29,883,291 to $108,219,192 on account of interest and management on the national debt. On the revenue side there was a decrease in income tax, but estate and other duties showed an increase of $5,260,000 to $44,280,000, while stamp duties yielded an additional $1,800,000 compared with the first half of 1932.

FLOATING DEBT

The floating debt outstanding September 30 was $1,020,860,000, an increase of $210,405,000 compared with the figure at the close of the last financial year. Although this is high, it is pointed out that a large part of it has been short-term borrowing for the exchange equalization fund, which now stands around $75,000,000.

Reading between the lines, the increase in stamp duties indicates the greater activity both of the Stock Exchange and the new issue market, which in itself is a sign that Britain slowly is recovering from the financial distress of two years ago.

COLLIE SAVED MEN BY ATTACKING BULL

LONDON (CP).—Rover, a collie dog belonging to James W. Gray, of the Mill Farm, Anstey, has been awarded the medal of the National Canine Defence League for life-saving. Rover seized a bull by the nose when the bull attacked two farm hands and saved their lives.

EXCHANGE PLOUGH FOR SEPARATOR

Canadian and British Agricultural Implements Traded as Result of Imperial Conference

LONDON (BUP).—British cream-separators are to be exchanged for Canadian ploughs. An arrangement to this effect has just been concluded between Messrs. R. A. Lister & Co., Ltd., of Dursley, the biggest cream-separator manufacturers in the British Empire, and the Cockshutt Plow Company of Canada, the biggest tractor plough makers in the Empire.

The first consignment of Lister cream-separators has already been sent to Canada, and the first consignment of Canadian ploughs, which have been specially designed for the British market, is now in this country.

According to the arrangement, the Cockshutt Plow Company will now distribute Lister cream-separators throughout Canada, and Lister will distribute Cockshutt tractor ploughs throughout the United Kingdom.

The arrangement is a direct result of the Imperial Conference at Ottawa.

FINGERPRINTS ORANG-OUTANG

Test Reveals Beast Closer to Human Beings Than Chimpanzees

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—Fingerprints of an orang-utang taken by detectives of the New South Wales Criminal Investigation Branch have proved of remarkable biological interest, for they are indistinguishable from human fingerprints. Fingerprints of a chimpanzee are not so close to man, biologically, as those of the orang-utang, although tests abroad had led scientists to assume that the chimpanzee was more intelligent than the orang-utang.

The prints were taken at the Taronga Park Zoo, Sydney, at the direction of the Commissioner of Police, who has made a life-long study of fingerprints and is one of the leading authorities on the subject in the world.

CLOSER TO HUMANS

"I found that in the case of the chimpanzee the prints were all of an incomplete type," said the commissioner. "There were ridges with the usual characteristics, but they all ran to the one plan or pattern. In the prints taken of the orang-utang the patterns varied, as with human beings. The prints of both thumbs were of the whorl pattern, but other prints which were taken showed other patterns. The ridges appeared to be slightly more 'stringy' than those of a human being—they were not quite so clearly defined—but that might be due to difficulty in obtaining the prints. Of course, one set of prints from one animal is not sufficient to justify a theoretical statement, but I am clearly of opinion that of the two animals the orang-utang is closer to the human being than the chimpanzee."

What's New and Interesting for the Women

Triple Family Wedding

LONDON.—A mother, son and daughter were married at the parish church at Otley, Yorkshire.

They were Mrs. Wardman, a widow, of Lawn Cottage, Otley, and Mr. Harry and Miss Hilda Wardman.

First the son was married, and then there was a double ceremony, at which the bride was the mother and daughter.

The son had gone back to the church after his wedding to give his mother away. A younger son was the best man at the wedding of his brother and sister.

The vicar of Otley (the Rev. S. E. Lowe) officiated at the wedding, and later the three couples held a reception.

"First Harry decided to get married," a member of the family said. "Then a house for which Hilda had been waiting became vacant, and it was arranged that there should be a double wedding."

"Mrs. Wardman and Mr. Arthur Lee, an Otley widower, who had been friends for a long time, said they would like to join in Mr. Lee's daughter was a bridesmaid."

Household Hints

To mend scratches of kid pumps, apply liquid court plaster to the scratch and it will be hardly visible.

When cooking saucers, custards and the like, drop a large marble into the vessel. It will roll and bob around, keeping the contents thoroughly stirred.

One of the best methods for cleaning varnished woodwork is to scour it with bran.

To remove automobile grease from a garment, rub lard on the spot, then wash in cold water, followed by a washing in warm water. This will remove all stain.

If parsley is kept in a jar with a tight lid, and in a cool place, it will keep fresh for a long time.

Scouting Group off to Hunt Locations

HOLLYWOOD.—To hunt locations for Paramount's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Director Stephen Roberts is heading a small group of the mountaineering regions of Northern Arizona. They will make their headquarters at Flagstaff, and will look over surrounding country for several hundred miles. Cary Cooper, Cary Grant and Richard Arlen will head the cast.

NEW COMEDY FOR McCAREY
Leo McCarey, upon concluding his work with the four Marx brothers in their latest Paramount picture, "Duck Soup," will begin preparation on another comedy at that studio, "Six of a Kind."

After washing a black silk dress soak it for twenty-four hours in clear rain water. This will freshen it until it looks almost like new.

Suit of Rough Wool

What is there that is so attractive about shaggy wool made into a garment? Is it reminiscent of our primitive ancestors, who had little protection against the cold of winter except the shaggy skins of animals?

Anyhow, this rough wool suit will appeal to many women—and especially to the college or business girl. It's fine to wear at the football game. The chic blouse is velvet, and so are the pocket flaps and collar of the jacket.

Earns Her Licence

First Japanese Girl to Fly Seaplane Calls for Congratulations

MISS Kikuko Matsumoto, twenty-two years old, is the first Japanese girl in Tokyo, Japan, to be given a licence to fly a seaplane. Miss Matsumoto recently called upon the Navy Department at Tokyo to receive the congratulations of the navy officers on her feat.

Stenographer Owns Horses

BOSTON (CP).—The link between the workaday sphere of Miss Mary Power, stenographer in a Congress Street office, and the thrilling world of the Rockingham race tracks has been fairly obscure. But, since two-year-old Coming Back soared down the course to a stunning victory, the relation is conspicuous.

All week Miss Power, twenty-one, has a routine like other stenographers and office workers in the thousands of acres of floor space in Boston's business buildings. "Duplications on this, duplicates on that," Carbon copy to So-and-So. . . . A business girl who is quietly efficient and exacting in the carrying out of her work.

IN SPORTS WORLD
On Saturdays, however, Miss Power may be found in the sports world, in the midst of the pulsing excitement of Rockingham and the haddock. Her two horses, Coming Back and Trojan, are in the money this year.

Only a few years back she gained considerable local fame in dog circles about Dover. Her Dalmatians were winning attention. And it wasn't long before they were winning prizes.

Two years ago the Congress Street office worker went to New York for her vacation. At the Empire City track one day she watched the races and fell in love with Night Extra. She bought him, using up all her vacation money. The sagacity of her purchase was proved in the Fall when Night Extra started winning at the Eastern Massachusetts fairs.

NIGHT EXTRA
Night Extra was a profitable adventure. Last June, now greatly attached to the business of owning horses, Miss Power made another deal. She sold Night Extra and bought Trojan, a young stallion by Trojan out of No Time. Since then she has added Coming Back to her stable, who has been winning consistently under the emerald green and silver colors of Miss Power's own selection.

Even then they weren't paying much attention to the little stenographer from Boston—nor to her stable either. After all, those things are apt to happen in the mud. "Wait," said the wise boys, "until she gets a fast track."

Then came the day Coming Back paid $107.40 to confound the hard-boiled followers of the track, and to attract to the little stenographer the somewhat unwelcome attention she's been getting lately.

Ginger Pears Simple Recipe

Four pounds hard pears, three pounds sugar. Core and quarter the pears, then cut in eighths. Let them stand in the sugar overnight. In the morning add two lemons sliced thinly, one ounce of ginger root cut up in small pieces. Cook together slowly for three hours. Pour into jelly glasses and cover with paraffin.

If you like a high shoe, the new high cut which comes up just under the ankle bone will please you. These high shoes are high fashion at present.

Hat trimming is good this season, even on berets. But there isn't much of it on any hat. A buckle, a clip, a feather or bow, or a veil, are the favorites.

Flapper clothes are most decidedly out. Elegance is the keynote of the newer fashions that sponsor full bodied, a slight suggestion of hips and nipping in at the waist.

Parties Need Not Be Dull Because They Are Simple

BY KATHERINE BAKER

Most healthy people like their food, and "streamlined" diets are no exception. Their simplest teas may follow the past in tradition, but they certainly look to the future in foods. The girls use imagination to give interest to such prosaic things as the small cake plate. It is those little cakes and sweets that top off the party that puzzle the hostess. It is rather a relief to be able to make a pretty array with something else than shortbread and nut balls. New fruity rolls, such as served at two of the deb. teas this year are comforting. The guest does not feel that she is gobbling pounds and yet the flavor combination is just too good to miss.

It isn't hard to make the rolls and they set off the sweets plates like a Chanel model. Anyone who starts making them should stuff the telephone and doorbell for fifteen minutes because the syrup has to be just right to make the fruit roll perfect. And it's too good to be spoiled.

ROLLS
Put one and one-half cups of brown sugar (press it down when measuring), two teaspoons light corn syrup, and one-half cup of milk in a saucepan and cook until a small amount of syrup forms a soft ball in cold water. Anyone who cooks with a thermometer will know the syrup is ready at 234 F. Cool the syrup, and while it is cooling stone and drop one-half cup of dates, and chop finely one-half cup of raisins. Then add vanilla to the syrup and beat until creamy. Add the chopped fruits and one can of coconut, Southern style shreds, and mix. Shape the mixture in an oblong roll one and one-half inches in diameter, and wrap in waxed paper. Chill. Cut in slices, and this recipe gives fifteen "spiffy" pieces.

APRICOTS
Apricots make a nice, fruity ball that is half cake, half candy. Simply wash and steam for five minutes three-quarters of a cup of apricots. Put these, and one half cup of nut meats and three-quarters cup of coconut, premium shreds, through the food chopper. Add half teaspoon grated lemon rind and the same of orange and one tablespoon of lemon juice to the chopped mixture and knead the mixture until blended. If it seems a little dry after kneading, soften it with orange juice. If it is too wet and does not hold together, work in a small amount of confectionery sugar. Shape into balls about three-quarters of an inch in diameter. Roll in granulated sugar. Makes eighteen to twenty balls of wonderful flavor.

A Treat for Dessert

CHOCOLATE WHIPPED CREAM ROLL

(Mrs. Mary Morton's Daily Tested Recipe)

One pint whipping cream, five eggs, separated; one cup powdered sugar, four tablespoons cocoa, one tablespoon flour, pinch of salt, one teaspoon vanilla. Mix and sift dry ingredients. Fold into stiffly beaten whites. Add well beaten yolks and vanilla. Turn onto a towel sprinkled with powdered sugar, cover with damp towel and cool ten minutes. Trim edges. Spread with unsweetened whipped cream and roll. Serves six or eight.

Women Important In Public World

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP).—Women, as well as men, have a definite and significant position in Canada's public life, according to Senator Cairine Wilson.

The Dominion's first female member of the Upper House accepts the status of woman as primarily that of housekeeper. But, "Politics are national housekeeping," she told a women's service club luncheon here.

Senator Wilson spoke of the early struggles of pioneer women who gained for their descendants the freedom they enjoy today, especially the power to make their voice heard in public life through exercise of the franchise.

"Recalling their struggles," she said, "we should make the best possible use of the privilege we have in the franchise."

The woman senator quoted President Roosevelt of the United States as saying that women would step forward into public life in increasing numbers if they realized how urgently their help was needed. She expressed surprise on learning women were ineligible for seats in the New Brunswick Legislature.

Most evening coats are long and "drippy" this season. Exquisite and jackets, however, are waist-length.

Did you know that "Blue Eagle" is the name of a lovely new color for Autumn?

Hannah Gives Suggestions for Making Gifts for Xmas

No list of gift suggestions would be complete without aprons. So it is aprons this week, which can be made now while cotton goods can be bought at sale prices. As I have boasted before, I am just an old-fashioned person and little dabs of organdie don't come under the heading of aprons when I make out the list. My aprons must cover at least most of a frock and they must be decorative. More than that I wouldn't ask of them.

They can be as bizarre, as ultra smart, as wildly colorful as imagination can make them, but they must do what they are supposed to—protect the frock and be becoming.

These are my own inventions and I hope you'll like them. I decided the halter neckline, which is so fashionable for evening gowns and bathing suits, providing you pay plenty for them, would be just as smart on an apron, and so here is a plain unbleached muslin apron which uses the halter neckline, and in a similar way gathers in the material at the hips and back. Two straight pieces of material are used to make the bib and the skirt. Ginghams or calico stripes and tie at the back of the neck and waist. I used brown and white dotted material, dress over from a cotton Summer dress, for the strings. They blend in nicely with the off-white of the muslin, and I am going to give the apron to a brown-eyed young woman who actually whips up a cake or two in her own kitchen.

Diagonal checks in blue and white make the good old-fashioned apron at the bottom. A flower applique makes the pocket, and the green and white, or pink as the case may be, is repeated at the end of the strings. The flower is stitched up to the middle and is faced, so that the petals fall down there is a finished appearance. Both are excellent presents for women who do their own work.

Lamp shades—always an acceptable gift—yet always a pitfall for the careless shopper. There isn't a house which wouldn't be a better place for a new lamp shade or two, but how carefully they must be selected. There, with that little warning let me get on to telling you about these four styles, two of which I am sure cannot be found in the shops.

If you are planning on making a lamp shade for a gift, consult the owner of the lamp, for she might have very definite ideas about color, or at least look over the house yourself, and don't give her something she will want to hide.

The shade at the top is parchment in any color desired. Its novelty is the binding and the perky little bows of calico. The bows stand out very independently, and are sure to attract favorable comment.

Paper applique makes the scalloped border and the foliage on the shade in this center. The little cherry clusters are ball fringe, the kind that grandmother used to have on her curtains. It can be dyed any color you choose. If you prefer purple grapes to red cherries, just get purple dye. Varnish over the paper trim.

The square shade is made of cloth. It can be silk or cotton, also in any desired color. A border of contrasting color is put on in a triangular design and edged in cord, silk or cotton as the lamp is silk or cotton. The cord is couched at the points.

Just a whimsical idea for the child's room is the drum illustration. It is made all of paper, if you are being very economical. The stripes and cords are merely paper put on to resemble the real thing, and red stripes edge the top and bottom. This, too, is varnished all over. Of course, if you want to very exact you might use real cord, leather and parchment in the same effect.

The peasant motif seems to predominate these days in luncheon cloths and other table coverings. Here are three ideas for luncheon sets which can be made now for filling out that Christmas list later. All three glorify the lowly dish towel. The regular striped dish towel in red, green, blue or yellow stripes is used to make the tablecloth. Forty-eight, fifty-two, sixty or more inches are used for the long runner, depending on the size of the table. This is stitched at each end, and the threads pulled for fringe. Stitching first secures the threads so the fringe lies better. Then eleven or twelve-inch pieces are cut for the four individual place doilies. These are fringed along the selvedge and hemmed top and bottom. The white centre is used for the little square napkins, which also are fringed.

The centre set uses the popular checked dish towel. Linen to match the bars is applied at the ends as a hem trim on both runner and doilies. A corner is applied on the small square napkin.

The two-toned stripes of the lower set are used to make a border on runner and doilies. This takes more material than either of the others, for there must be plenty of border to finish the ends of the runner and the top and bottom of the doilies. Small pieces of the border make smart little corners on these small napkins.

Bright peasant china on these luncheon sets would cheer up any guests.

When preparing potatoes for boiling, instead of peeling the whole potato, just peel a narrow strip entirely around the middle of each potato lengthwise. When cooked, the skins will slip off easily.

Dry bran is an excellent cleanser. Rub the cloth down with dry bran, then use more force on the soiled parts. Then brush thoroughly.

Silver Sets Table

Service for One Is Dignified, Charming in Lustrous White Metal

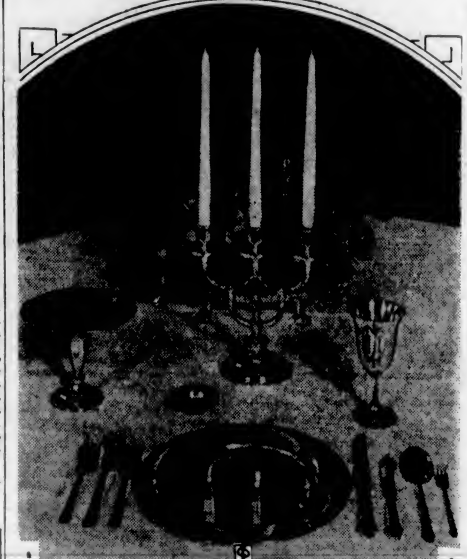

Table set for one with flower bowl, candelabra, compote, goblet, nut dish, service plate and flatware of sterling silver.

BY MARY MORTON
BEING off the gold standard as a nation, naturally we talk more about silver.

It's a lovely subject if you're talking about silver for the home. Every home does—or should—treasure some fine old pieces that have been in the family for generations. Most of these heirlooms are of good plated ware, but when it is sterling silver there is an added satisfaction in its possession.

When silver is used with lovely china and glassware it adds its lustre to theirs, making an exquisite variety in table setting.

Occasionally it is used alone, as in the table setting for a single person shown above. Most housewives would consider an entire silver table service too rich for frequent use, even if it could be afforded. But you can see the effect of this single service, the pieces in simple but exquisite designs.

Once the table setting, be it china, silver, glassware, or all three—which is usual—is established, dressing up the table in various ways for edibility and originality is in order.

In the latter class are the new asbestos ash trays that may be used for a meal and thrown away, so inexpensive are they. They come in natural color, decorated with black silhouettes in such motifs as polo players, scotties, ships and the like.

In the list of decorative edibles are: Slices of lemon rolled in chopped parsley, celery stuffed with cheese and covered with paprika, curled celery, stuffed eggs, tiny onions sprinkled lightly with minute pieces of parsley, watercress, pickles, cream of cottage cheese balls sprinkled with paprika, orange or lemon slices, stuffed dates.

For the damsel with the pale blonde hair, here is an excellent rinse which is composed of lemon juice, peroxide, vinegar, water, and if you wish, bluing. Your hair should first be thoroughly shampooed and every bit of soap rinsed out with clear water. Then the strained juice of one lemon, one tablespoon of peroxide, one tablespoon of vinegar and a pint of clear water should be mixed together, and a few drops of hair bluing should be added. This solution should be used as the last rinse after the hair has been thoroughly rinsed of all soap. On blonde hair of the type described it will not only bring out the highlights in the hair, but will also give it gloss and lustre.

Ink Stains Removed by Aid of Milk

Yellowish streaks in pure white hair may be caused by the use of a hot iron, by the application of certain hair tonics, and by drying the hair with a hot air current. Try using a bluing rinse after shampooing. If your hair has acquired an unattractive yellowish tint, the purplish tint of hair bluing is generally used for snowy white hair that has become streaked and yellowish in appearance. If the bluing rinse in itself is not sufficient, use dilute peroxide and salt on the yellow streaks, and then apply the bluing rinse. This treatment will help a great deal to remove any yellowish streaks and tinges, and will aid in restoring your hair to its former snowy whiteness.

Mortgage Brings Good Fortune To Rug Maker

GRANVILLE CENTRE, N.S. (CP).—Here is the story of a woman who met adversity with a smile and turned it into good fortune by courage and industry.

Four years ago Mrs. Estella Withers was faced with a mortgage that threatened her with the loss of her home. She had no money, and it seemed the home must go for lack of it. Perhaps it would have, too, had not Mrs. Withers been out of the run of ordinary individuals.

She cast about for ways of raising cash. She was an excellent hooker of rugs. Her handicraft had been commented upon often. She had, besides, made some sales of her designs; infrequent, it was true, but when some had been sold, why could not more be sold? People needed mats.

She finally decided to take up rug making as a business. She disposed of few at first, but gradually her skill increased as knowledge of her skill widened. One rug she sold for $125; others brought proportionately smaller prices.

Soon the mortgage had been paid off. Other debts went, too. And Mrs. Withers found that she was deriving a comfortable income. She decided to keep hooking and selling her rugs. Now she sells them as fast as she can hook. More than that, she has booked orders which will keep her deft fingers busy all winter. One order for nine large rugs came from a commercial firm in Halifax.

Style Whimsies

The flare for off-the-face hats is growing in fashionable circles. It's well liked by the younger set in Paris.

Velvet bows in red, green, blue, etc. give the feminine touch to dark colored frocks for school or business.

If you're giving a swimming party in an indoor tank, of course, unless you live in California or Florida—your swim suit should be beaded and iridescent in effect.

A new rough woolen cloth is named "elephant's hide."

When you don't know what frock to buy or to wear—choose black.

Bride Is Too Late At Church

LONDON.—So great was the number of cars and people near Boston (Lincolnshire) Parish Church for the wedding of Miss Lavina Morley, carnival queen of Boston last year, and Mr. Arthur Wrigley, son of a Boston town councillor, that another wedding was unable to take place.

The marriage of Miss May Wilkinson, of Skene, and Mr. Eric Rainbow, of Boston, was timed for 2:40, but the bride's car could not get through the traffic, and it was one minute to three when she arrived.

The Rev. L. C. Hodge, the curate, pointed out that it was too late to conclude the ceremony within the legal hours.

The disappointed bride and bridegroom were let out by the side door of the church to escape the large crowds from the wedding which had taken place earlier.

Helpful Aids to Beauty

There are several things that one can do to make a permanent wave less kinky. Daily vigorous brushing of the hair in the first place, will make the hair more tractable. It will distribute the natural oil evenly over each hair and will help to soften the wave. Hot oil shampoos and softening rinses will also help to make the wave flatter and less kinky. And if, after each time that you shampoo your hair, set it in wide, loose waves, it will eventually lose its kinkiness and will become trained to retain a smooth, even wave.

For the damsel with the pale blonde hair, here is an excellent rinse which is composed of lemon juice, peroxide, vinegar, water, and if you wish, bluing. Your hair should first be thoroughly shampooed and every bit of soap rinsed out with clear water. Then the strained juice of one lemon, one tablespoon of peroxide, one tablespoon of vinegar and a pint of clear water should be mixed together, and a few drops of hair bluing should be added. This solution should be used as the last rinse after the hair has been thoroughly rinsed of all soap. On blonde hair of the type described it will not only bring out the highlights in the hair, but will also give it gloss and lustre.

Try using a bluing rinse after shampooing. If your hair has acquired an unattractive yellowish tint, the purplish tint of hair bluing is generally used for snowy white hair that has become streaked and yellowish in appearance. If the bluing rinse in itself is not sufficient, use dilute peroxide and salt on the yellow streaks, and then apply the bluing rinse. This treatment will help a great deal to remove any yellowish streaks and tinges, and will aid in restoring your hair to its former snowy whiteness.

The bathroom mirror is always being splattered with tooth paste and soap. Wipe it off each morning with a towel and you will find these small particles will polish the glass as they are being wiped away.

Printed Velveteen

Printed velveteen is taking an important place in the fashions for Autumn and Winter, 1933-4. This model of that fabric in dot motif is an excellent choice for the college girl. The sleeves are the popular leg o' mutton type, and the bodice section is slightly bloused with a high neckline. The tam type of hat seems particularly appropriate to wear with this dress.
